chro'ma, 1 krō'mə; 2 crō'ma, n. 1. Color-intensity; the degree of departure from white. 2. Mus. (1) A sharp or a flat. (2) Same as CROMA. (3) A semitone. (4) A tetrachord in Greek music. [L., < Gr. chrōma, surface, color, < chroia, skin, color.]

chro-ma'ce-a, n. pl. The simplest forms of organic life, related to the bacteria.— chro-maf'fin, a. Zool. Denoting certain pigmented cells supposed to represent the medullary portion of the suprarenal capsules of the higher vertebrata, and existing in the walls of some of the blood-vessels of the Marsipobranchii, and various fishes.— chro-mam'e-fer, n. An adjustable monochord instrument with chromatic scale, to aid in tuning pianos.— chro-man'-il, a. Relating to chromium and anilin: applied to various coal-tar colors treated with chromium.— chromanil black, see BLACK.— chro'ma-phore, n. See CHROMATOPHORE.— chro"ma-sel-op'ti-con, n. Optics. An instrument by means of which different-colored shadows are thrown upon a screen: used in testing for color-blindness. chro"ma-to-sci-am'e-ter‡; chro"ma-to-ski-am'e-ter‡.— chro'ma-scope, n. An instrument for exhibiting certain optical effects of colors. chro'mo-scope‡.

chro'mate, 1 krō'mēt; 2 crō'māt, vt. To subject to the action of a chromate or dichromate.

chro'mate, n. Chem. A salt of chromic acid.— lead chromate (Chem.), chromium yellow. See YELLOW.

chro-mat'ic, 1 kro-mat'ik; 2 cro-măt'ic, a. 1. Belonging, relating to, made of, produced by or abounding in color. 2. Mus. Proceeding by semitones. [< L. chromaticus, < Gr. chrōmatikos, < chrōma(t-); see CHROMA.] chro-mat'i-cal‡.— chromatic aberration, see ABERRATION. 4.— c. accent (Phon.), the pitch-accent; a change of pitch.— c. alteration of a tone (Mus.), the lowering or raising of a pitch, as may be indicated by an accidental, a half step only.— c. chord, a chord which contains notes foreign to the key.— c. harmony, harmony in which chromatic chords are employed.— c. interval, a diminished or augmented interval.— c. letter (Print.), a type made in sections, to be printed in different colors.— c. melody, a melody containing tones foreign to the key.— c. printing, printing in colors.— c. scale, a succession of semitones. — c. semitone or half step, the interval between a note and the same note flatted or sharped.— c. sign, an accidental sharp or flat.— c. sphere (Bot.), the cluster of severed chromosomes, formed at a pole of the nuclear spindle, during the anaphase in mitosis, or indirect cell-division.— c. tone, a tone foreign to the key in which it is found.— chro-mat'i-cal-ly, adv.— chro-mat'i-cism, n. A chromatic modulation, expression, etc.

chro-mat'ic, n. 1. A note changed in pitch by an accidental. 2. Chromatics. 3†. The art of coloring.

chro"ma-tic'i-ty, n. Biol. The quantity or state of the chromatin in the cell-nucleus.

chro-mat'ics, 1 kro-mat'ıks; 2 cro-măt'ics, n. 1. The science of colors. 2. pl. Chromatic tones or intervals.

chro'ma-tin, 1 krō'mə-tin; 2 crō'ma-tin, n. Biol. The extremely minute particles or granules that make up the chromoplasm of a cell-nucleus.

While the majority of protoplasmic granules are probably to be regarded as metaplastic in nature, there is one class of granulations of which this is certainly not true, namely, the grains of chromatin, so named from their peculiar affinity for certain dyes, such as carmine, logwood and various aniline stains. These grains may occur as chromidia, scattered through the protoplasm, or they may be concentrated at one or more spots to form a definite nucleus or nuclei, which may or may not be limited from the remaining protoplasm by a definite membrane.

Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. xxii, p. 477.

— chro"ma-tin'ic, a. Of or pertaining to the chromatin of a cell-nucleus.— chro'ma-tism, n. 1. Chromatic aberration. See ABERRATION. 2. Bot. The assumption by normally green plant-organs, as leaves, of a color approximating that of the petals. chro'mism†.— chro'ma-tize or -tise, vt. To impregnate or treat with a chromate.— chro'ma-to-blast, n. Same as CHROMOBLAST.— chro"ma-to-dys-o'pi-a, n. Pathol. Color-blindness.— chro'ma-to-gen, a. Generating color; chromatogenous.— chromatogen organ (Echin.), in the Echinodermata, the axial organ.— chro"ma-tog'e-nous, a. Producing or generating color. chro"ma-tig'e-nous†.— chro-mat'o-graph, n. An instrument that produces various shades of color by the rotation and interference of colored segments.— chro"ma-tog'ra-phy, n. A treatise on or description of colors.— chro'ma-toid, a. Biol. Capable of receiving a deep stain; possessing a strong affinity for dyes.— chro"ma-to-ki-nop'-si-a, n. Psych. The visual illusion of movement obtained by passing small blue circles on a red cardboard and moving it to and fro in its own plane, when the circles appear to spring from side to side.— chro"ma-tol'o-gy, n. The science of, or treatise on color; chromatography.— chro"matol'y-sis, n. Med. The dissolution of nuclear chromatin in cells. chro-mol'y-sis†.— chro"ma-to-lyt'ic, a.— chro"ma-tom'e-ter, n. 1. A scale for measuring or distinguishing colors. 2. A chromometer.— chro"ma-to-path'i-a, n. Pathol. A diseased condition of the pigment-cells of the skin; chromatosis. chro"ma-top'a-thy†.— chro"ma-to-path'ic, a. Relating to or affected with chromatopathia.— chro'ma-to-phile, chro'ma-to-phil, chro"ma-to-phil'ic, chro"ma-toph'i-lous, a. Same as CHROMOPHILOUS.— chro"ma-to-phil'i-a, n. Biol. A chromophilous condition. — chro"ma-to-pho'bi-a, n. Pathol. Abnormal aversion to certain colors.— chro'ma-to-phore, n. 1. One of the pigment-bearing sacs with contractile walls by which changes of color are effected in various animals, as in chameleons and cephalopods; a pigment-cell. 2. Bot. A plate of a brownish-green color in diatoms colored with diatomin. 3. Zooph. One of the brightly colored bead-like bodies situated in the oral disks outside the tentacles, as in certain actinias.— chro"ma-to-pho-ro'ma, n. [-MA-TA, pl.] Pathol. A melanosarcoma; a simple melanoma; a pigmented sarcoma.— chro"ma-to-phor'ic, chro"ma-toph'o-rous, a. chro'ma-to-plasm, n. Biol. The color-substance in cells; a general term covering the chromatophores — chro"ma-to-pseudop'sis, n. Optical illusion in seeing color.— chro"matop'si-a, n. Pathol. A morbid state of vision wherein the impression of color arises spontaneously; chromatic vision. chro'ma-top"sy†; chro-mop'si-a†. — chro"ma-toptom'e-ter, n. An apparatus used in chromatoptometry.— chro"ma-top-tom'e-try, n. The art or act of ascertaining the degree of sensibility for colors possessed by the eye. — chro"ma-to-scl-am'e-ter, -skl-am'e-ter, n. Same as CHROMASCIOPTICON.— chro-mat'o-scope, n. 1. Astron. A reflecting telescope for studying the scintillations of stars. Part of it may be rotated eccentrically to produce the image of a star as a ring instead of as a point. 2. An instrument for combining different-colored rays of light into one compound color.— chro"ma-tos'co-py, n. The examination of the color of bodies.— chro"ma-to'sis, n. Same as CHROMATOPATHIA.— chro-mat'o-sphere, n. See CHROMOSPHERE.— chro-mat"o-spher'ic, a.— chro"ma-to-sphe'rite, n. Biol. A deeply straining mass of protoplasm found in the nuclei of some of the Sporozoa.— chro'ma-trope, n. 1. A device consisting of transparent colored disks with radiating designs so arranged that by rotating them in opposite directions, one in front of the other, a kaleidoscopic effect is produced: often attached to a magic lantern. 2. A disk so painted with different colors that, when it is rotated on a central axis, streams of color seem to flow to or from the center. 3. Any one of the red or violet dyes which become blue or black by the action of potassium dichromate. chro'mo-trope†.— chro"ma-trop'o-scope, n. A disk with apertures in front of colored surfaces, for the illustration of certain optical effects.— chro"ma-tu'ri-a, n. Pathol. Unnatural color of the urine.— chro'ma-type, n. See CHROMOTYPE.

chrome, 1 krōm; 2 crōm, vt. [CHROMED; CHROM'ING.] To subject to the mordant action of a solution of potassium dichromate, as wool before dyeing.— chromed colors, colors intensified by the use of potassium dichromate.

chrome, n. 1. The yellow pigment obtained from lead chromate. 2. Chromium. [F., < Gr. chrōma, color, < chrota, skin.] — chrome alum (Chem.), any double sulfate of chromium with potassium, sodium, or ammonium, as $Cr_2K_2(SO_4)_4 + 24H_2O$.— c. black, blue, green, red, yellow, etc., see under respective colors.— c. Bordeaux, same as BORDEAUX RED. See RED.— c.-diopside (Mineral), a diopside containing chromium.— c. iron or iron ore, same as CHROMITE.— c. kid, goatskin tanned and finished by the chromic-acid method. Compare VICI KID, under KID.— c. spinel, same as PICOTITE.

-chrome, suffix. Used adjectively to signify color. [< Gr. chrōma, color.]

chrom"es-the'si-a, or -æs-the'si-a, 1 krōm'es-thī'zı-ə; 2 crōm'ĕs-thē'zhi-a, n. 1. Psychol. A form of synesthesia in which words, numbers, sounds, etc., are involuntarily connected with a mental vision of color. 2. Sensitivity to colors in general. [< CHROM- + ESTHESIA.]

chro'mic, 1 krō'mık; 2 crō'mic, a. Chem. Of or pertaining to chromium, especially in its higher valency.— chromic acid, a red crystalline compound (H_2CrO_4) derived from chromic anhydrid, known chiefly by its salts, which form the most important compounds of chromium: the term is often improperly applied to chromium trioxid. — c. anhydrid, a powerful oxidizer (CrO_3), considered to be an anhydrid of chromic acid; it is crystalline and of a bright-red hue. chromium trioxid†.— c. iron, same as CHROMITE.— c. oxid, a green compound (Cr_2O_3) formed by heating potassium dichromate to redness; chromium sesquioxid. Guignet's green†. Compare CHROMOUS.

chro'mi-cize, 1 krō'mı-sız; 2 crō'mi-çiz, vt. [-CIZED; -CIZ'ING.] Chem. To saturate with a solution of chromic acid.

Chro'mi-dæ, 1 krō'mı-dī; 2 crō'mi-dē, n. pl. Ich. The Cichlidæ. Chro'mis, n. (t. g.) [L., < Gr. chromis, a sea-fish.] Chro'mi-des†; Chro-mid'i-dæ†.— chro'mid, a. & n.— chro-mid'i-an, chro'mi-did, n.— chro'mi-doid, a.

chro-mid'i-um, 1 kro-mid'ı-um; 2 cro-mid'i-ŭm, n. [-I-A, pl.] Bot. An algal cell in a lichen-thallus; a gonidium. [< Gr. chrōma, color.]

chro"mi-dro'sis, 1 krō"mı-drō'sıs; 2 crō"mi-drō'sis, n. Pathol. A morbid condition causing colored perspiration. [< CHROM- + Gr. hidrōs, sweat.] chrom"hi-dro'sis†; chro"mo-crin'i-a†.

chro-mif'er-ous, 1 kro-mif'ər-us; 2 cro-mif'ér-ŭs, a. Yielding or containing chromium. [< CHROMIUM + L. fero, bear.]

chro'mi-ole, 1 krō'mı-ōl; 2 crō'mi-ōl, n. Cytol. A supposititious chromatin particle entering into the composition of the chromomeres. [< Gr. chroma, color.]

chro"mi-om'e-ter, 1 krō"mı-om'ı-tər; 2 crō"mi-ŏm'e-ter, n. An instrument for determining the purity of water by color. [< CHROM- + Gr. metron, measure.]

chro'mite, 1 krō'mait; 2 crō'mit, n. Mineral. 1. A massive, granular or compact, submetallic, black, opaque iron chromate ($FeCr_2O_4$), that crystallizes in the isometric system. 2. Chem. Any compound of chromium sesquioxid (Cr_2O_3) with the monoxid of any other metal.

chro'mi-um, 1 krō'mı-um; 2 crō'mi-ŭm, n. Chem. A grayish-white metallic element. See ELEMENT. Aside from its use in making chrome steel this element is not commercially useful, but its compounds are largely used as pigments and dyes. [< F. chrome, < Gr. chrōma; see CHROMA.] — chromium dioxychlorid, same as CHLOROCHROMIC ACID.— c. sesquioxid, chromic oxid. See under CHROMIC.

chro'mo, 1 krō'mo; 2 crō'mo, n. A chromolithograph.

chro'mo-. Derived from Greek chrōma, color (see CHROMA): a combining form. Used also as the combining form of CHROMIUM.— chro"mo-ar'to-ty"py, n. Phot. A process in colloganhy for making colored prints.— chro'mo-blast, n. A connective-tissue pigment-cell.— chro"mochal-cog'ra-phy, n. A process of obtaining colored prints from copper plates.— chro"mo-col'lo-graph, n. Phot. A three- or more colored print made from different plates, one for each color, produced by the collotype process. chro"mo-col'lo-type†.— chro"mo-col'lo-graph'ic, a.— chro"mo-col-log'ra-phy, n.— chro"mo-cra"ter, n. Pathol. A red blood-corpuscle assuming the shape of a crater.— chro"mo-cyc'lo-graph, n. [Rare.] A picture printed from several blocks bearing different colors. chro"mo-syc'lograph†.— chro"mo-cy-tom'e-ter, n. A hemochromometer. See under HEMO-.— chro'mo-gen, n. 1. Chem. (1) Any organic coloring-matter. (2) Any natural pigment that owes its coloring power to a chromophore. (3) A dye derived from naphthalene. It develops a brown color on wool by oxidation. 2. Physiol. Chem. Any matter in the animal or vegetable economy which under certain conditions becomes colored or deepens its hue. chro'mo-gene†. — chro"mo-gen'ic, a. 1. Relating to or containing chromogen. 2. Producing color. chro-mog'e-nous†.— chro'mo-gram, n. Phot. Any one of the three negatives, containing each an image corresponding to a definite part of the spectrum, employed in making color-photographs.— chro'mo-graph, n. A hectograph.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place either singly or in groups.

chro'mold, 1 krō'meid; 2 crō'mŏid. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Chromidæ. II. n. One of the Chromidæ.

chro"mo-leu'cite, 1 krō"mo-lū'sait; 2 crō"mo-lū'çit, n. Same as CHROMOPLASTID.

chro"mo-lith'o-graph, 1 krō"mo-lith'o-graf; 2 crō"molith'o-gráf, n. A print in colors obtained by chromolithography. [< CHROMO- + LITHOGRAPH.] chro'molith†.— chro"mo-lith'ic, chro"mo-lith"o-graph'ic, a.— chro"mo-lith'o-graph, v.— chro"mo-li-thog'ra-pher, n. chro"mo-li-thog'ra-phy, 1 krō"mo-lı-thog'ra-fı; 2 crō"-mo-li-thŏg'ra-fy, n. The process of lithographic printing in colors. The drawing is executed on stones, a separate stone for every color; the stones are printed from separately, usually in the order of the lightest to darkest. The word is little used in the trade. Compare LITHOGRAPHY.

chro-mom'e-ter, n. 1. Metal. An instrument for assaying by comparing the intensity of the color of the bead when an ore is fused with borax with the color given by a known quantity of the metal. 2. An instrument for determining the color of petroleum and other oils.— Stead's chromometer, see STEAD'S COLORIMETER, under COLORIMETER.— chro'mo-phane, n. The coloring-matter of the cones of the retina, held in solution by a fat.— chro'mo-phil, chro'mo-phile, n. Any substance of a chromophilous nature, such as the granules sometimes found in white blood-corpuscles.— Nissl's chromophils, the bodies present in the somatochromes surrounding the nuclei of the cells in the gray matter of nerve-tissue.— chro-moph'i-lous, a. Easily colored. chro'mo-philet. — chro'mo-phobe, a. Incapable of taking color-stain; lacking affinity for staining: opposed to chromophile.— chro'mo-phore, n. Chem. A chemical group, as— N:N— or — O:O—, etc., that must be present in a given class of organic compounds to produce colors.— chro"mo-phor'ic, a.— chro-moph'o-rous, a.— chro"mo-pho'to-graph, n. A picture produced in natural colors by a photographic process. See COLOR-PHOTOGRAPHY, under color.— chro"mo-pho-tog'ra-phy, n. Photography in colors.— chro"mo-pho"to-lith'o-graph, n. A photolithograph in colors. — chro'mo-phyl, n. Any coloring principle of plants other than chlorophyl. chro'mo-phyll†.— chro'mo-plasm, n. Biol. That portion of the contents of a cell-nucleus that has a strong affinity for coloring-matters. See under CELL.— chro"mo-plas'mic, a.— chro"mo-plas'tid, n. Bot. A protoplasmic granule similar to a chlorophyl-granule, but of a color other than green.— chro'mo-pro'te-id, n. Physiol. Chem. A proteid compounded with a coloring-matter.— chromop'si-a, n. See CHROMATOPSIA.— chro"mop-tom'e-ter, n. An instrument for determining the sharpness of the color-sense.— chro-mop"to-met'ri-cal, a.— chro'moscope, n. Same as CHROMASCOPE.— chro'mo-some, n. Biol. One of the segments into which the chromoplasmic filaments of a cell-nucleus break up just before indirect division. See KARYOKINESIS.— chro"mo-so'mal, a. Relating to chromosomes. chro"mo-so-mat'ic†; chro"mosom'ic†.

chro'mo-sphere, 1 krō'mo-sfīr; 2 crō'mo-sfēr, n. Astron. A relatively thin layer of incandescent red gas surrounding the sun and resting on the photosphere. It is invisible to direct vision except at the beginning or end of a total eclipse, but may always be seen with a powerful spectroscope.

It is within and quite distinct from the corona, and is usually called the 'chromosphere,' being a sort of sphere of colored fire surrounding the sun. LANGLEY New Astron. p. 61. [H. M. & CO. 1891.] [< CHROMO- + SPHERE.] chro-mat'o-sphere†.— chro"mo-spher'ic, a.

chro"mo-stro'bo-scope, n. A toy that illustrates persistence of visual impressions by the rotating of colored designs.— chro'mo-trope, n. Same as CHROMATROPE.— chro'mo-type, n. 1. A picture produced by the chromotype process. 2. A photographic process in which some salt of chromium, as potassium dichromate, is employed as a sensitive agent. 3. A chromolithograph or other colored print. 4. A photograph in colors. chro'ma-type†.— chro"mo-typ'ic, a.— chro"mo-ty"po-graph'ic†.— chro'mo-typ"y, n. chro'ma-typ"y†; chro"mo-ty-pog'ra-phy†.

chro'mous, 1 krō'mus; 2 crō'mŭs, a. Of or pertaining to chromium in its lower valence. Compare CHROMIC. — chromous acid (Chem.), a monobasic acid (CrO.OH) which appears as a bluish-gray powder and is weak in action.

chro"mo-xy'lo-graph, 1 krō"mo-zaı'lo-graf; 2 crō"mo-zȳ'lo-gráf, n. A picture printed in colors from wooden blocks.— chro"mo-xy-log'ra-phy, n.

chro'mule, n. Bot. Same as CHROMOPHYL. chro'myle†. — chrom'y, a. Containing or full of chrome.— chro'myl, n. Chem. Chromium dioxid (CrO_2) regarded as a basic radical.— chromyl chlorid, a fuming deep-red fluid (CrO_2Cl_2), that is an active oxidizing agent.— chro'myle, n. 1. Chromule. 2. Chromyl.

Chron., chron., chronol., abbr. See ABBREVIATION.

chro'nal, 1 krō'nal; 2 crō'nal, a. Of or pertaining to time.

chron-an'a-gram, 1 kren-an'ə-gram; 2 crŏn-ăn'a-grăm, n. An anagram of a chronogram, expressing the same date. [M.]

chron'ic, 1 kren'ik; 2 crŏn'ic a. 1. Continuing through a long period of time (always in the unfavorable sense); inveterate; prolonged; lingering: specif. said of a disease, and then opposed to acute; as, chronic rheumatism.

It was a chronic evil in the system of slavery that slaves would run away from their masters. NICOLAY AND HAY Abraham Lincoln vol. iii, p. 19. [c. co. 1890.]

chron'i-ca, 1 kren'ı-kə; 2 crŏn'i-ca, n. Plural of CHRONICON.

chro-nic'i-ty, 1 kro-nis'ı-tı; 2 cro-nĭç'i-ty, n. The state or condition of being chronic; as, the chronicity of a disease.

chron'i-cle, } 1 kren'ı-kl; 2 crŏn'i-cl, vt. [-CLED, CLD'; chron'i-cl'r, } -CLING.] To enter in or as in a chronicle; record.— chron'i-cler, n. chron'o-cler†.— chron'iclist, n. A chronicler.

chron'i-cle, n. A register of facts and events in the order of time; a historical record chronologically arranged, generally without discussion of causes or laws.

If the course of events and the destiny of nations were governed by no law . . . there could be no science of history, but only chronicles. F. H. HEDGE Ways of the Spirit p. 7. [A. BROS. 1878.]

[< F. chronique, < L. chronica, < chronicus; see CHRONIC, a.] SYN.: see ARCHIVES; HISTORY.— Books of Chronicles, a portion of the Old Testament Scripture — forming only one book in the Hebrew canon, but divided by the Greek translators into two — setting forth a history of the covenant from the death of King Saul to the decree of Cyrus for the rebuilding of the temple.— chronicle history (Drama), a historical play, generally based on English chronicles, as Shakespeare's Richard III. and Henry V.

chron'i-con, 1 kren'ı-kən; 2 crŏn'i-cŏn, n. [-CA, pl.] [Gr.] A chronicle.

chron"i-zo'o-spore, 1 kren"ı-zō'o-spōr; 2 crŏn"i-zō'o-spōr, n. Biol. A zoospore that is dormant for some time after its formation, as in a fresh-water alga, the water-net (Hydrodictyon). [< Gr. chronios, late (< chronos, time), + zōon, animal, + SPORE¹.] chron'i-spore†.

chron'o-, 1 kren'o-; 2 crŏn'o-. Derived from Greek chronos, time: a combining form.— chron"o-ba-rom'eter, n. A clock whose pendulum is a mercury-barometer, the average height of which it shows by its gain or loss.— chro-noc'ra-tor, n. Astrol. The planet which is in the ascendant at the time the sun enters the constellation Aries. — chron"o-gen'e-sis, n. Biol. The history of the evolution of any group of organisms.— chron'o-gram, n. 1. A writing or inscription in which a date or epoch is expressed by the sum or juxtaposition of numeral letters. The capitals in "GeorgIVs DVX BVCkInghaMI," when arranged thus, MDCXVVVIII, give the date of Buckingham's murder. 2. The record of a chronograph.— chron"o-grammat'ic, a.— -i-cal†; chron"o-gram'mic†.— chron"ogram-mat'i-cal-ly, adv.— chron"o-gram'ma-tist, n. One who makes chronograms.

chron'o-graph, } 1 kron'o-graf; 2 crŏn'o-gráf, n. 1. An chron'o-graf'r, } instrument for recording graphically the moment or duration of an event.

The ordinary astronomical chronograph consists of a revolving cylinder or disk on which a pen may make a mark whenever required. The pen is so connected with a clock, commonly by electricity, as to make a signal, or change its mark at equidistant intervals of time, and also connected with the hand of an operator so that he can make a mark at any required moment. The position of this mark among those made by the clock shows the exact time by the clock at which the mark was made. Some chronographs have attachments for printing the records automatically. 2. An instrument for marking very small intervals of time, as those of wave-lengths of sound. 3. A watch with an independent seconds-hand; a stop-watch. 4. A chronogram. [< Gr. chronographos, < chronos, time, + graphō, write.] — drop chronograph, a chronograph by which intervals of time are measured by intervals of space through which a weight falls during the time-intervals.— Le Boulengé c., an electrical device which records the distance a rod falls while a projectile is passing between two stated points, whereby, by computing the time in accordance with the laws of falling bodies, the required velocity of the projectile is ascertained: named for P. E. Le Boulengé of the Belgian artillery service.

Chronograph.

b, binding-screws; c, carriage; cw, clockwork; f, fountain pen automatically recording the seconds; g, governor; w, battery-wires.

— chro-nog'ra-pher, n. A chronicler; also, one who is a chronologist.— chron"o-graph'ic, a. 1. Belonging to the chronograph, or characterized by its use. 2. Chronogrammatic.— chron"o-graph'i-cal, a. Describing in the order of time; chronological.— -ly, adv.— chro-nog'ra-phy, n. 1. The chronological investigation and determination of past events. 2. [Rare.] The making of chronograms. 3. The graphic method applied to the measuring of the time-intervals of successive rapid motions; the use of chronographs. ‡†. Chronology.

chron"o-i'so-therm, 1 kren'o-ai'so-thûrm; 2 crŏn'o-i'so-thĕrm, n. Meteor. An isopleth of temperature. [< CHRONO- + ISOTHERM.]— chron"o-i"so-ther'mal, a. Relating to a chronoisotherm; designating a method of indicating average temperature for each hour or other period.

chro-nol'o-ger, 1 kro-nol'o-jər; 2 cro-nŏl'o-ger, n. One who studies or is versed in chronology; a chronological expert.

chro-nol'o-gy, 1 kro-nel'o-ji; 2 cro-nŏl'o-ġy, n. [-GIES, 1 -jiz; 2 -ġiz, pl.] 1. The science that treats of computation of time, or of investigation and arrangement of events in the order of time.

History is not a mere succession of events connected only by chronology. It is a chain of causes and effects.
LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. i, p. 332. [A. 1886.]

2. Any particular chronological system; as, the Hebrew chronology. 3. A list or table of events in the order of time. [< CHRONO- + -LOGY.]— astronomical chronology, chronology as related to or guided by celestial motions and phenomena.— chron"o-log'i-cal, a. Pertaining to or occupied with chronology; following the order of time. chron"o-log'ic‡.— chron"o-log'i-cal-ly, adv.— chro-nol'o-gize, vi. [-GIZED; -GIZ'ING.] 1. To arrange in the order of time. 2. To record.

chron-nom'e-ter, 1 kro-nem'i-tər; 2 cro-nŏm'e-ter, n. 1. A portable timekeeper of the highest attainable precision. It is rendered independent of variations in temperature by a compensation balance-wheel, and has an especially delicate and effective escapement.

Our watches we correct by the chronometer, and the chronometer must be regulated by the sun.
A. T. PIERSON Many Infallible Proofs p. 145. [F. H. R. 1886.]

2. Same as METRONOME. [< CHRONO- + -METER.]

— chronometer tables, tables available for any latitude, which facilitate chronometric correction from an observation of the sun's altitude.— D'Arsonval c., a portable clockwork arrangement with a single dial, recording time in units of 1/100 second: controlled in its movements by an electromagnet.— hack c. (Naut.), an inferior chronometer for taking observations, compared later with standard chronometer.— Jacquet's recording c. a stop-watch with a mechanical or an electric controlling apparatus capable of recording a second or one-fifth of a second on the revolving surface of a kymograph.— marine c., an accurate timekeeper used to determine a ship's longitude. It hangs horizontally in gimbals, and beats half-seconds.— solar c., a sun-dial for showing solar time.— chron"o-met'ric, a. Belonging to chronometry; pertaining to or determined by the chronometer. -ri-cal‡.— chron"o-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.

chro-nom'e-ter-er, 1 kro-nem'i-tər-ər; 2 cro-nŏm'e-ter-er, n. One skilled in the use of any time-measuring device.

chro-nom'e-try, 1 kro-nem'i-tri; 2 cro-nŏm'e-try, n. The measurement of time; also, the science or method of measuring time.

God has so arranged the chronometry of our spirits that there shall be thousands of silent moments. MARTINEAU Hours of Thought, Tides of the Spirit p. 12. [R. BROS. 1882.]

chro-non'o-my, 1 kro-nen'o-mi; 2 cro-nŏn'o-my, n. [Rare.] A mode of calculating or measuring time. [< CHRONO- + Gr. nomos, law.]

chron'o-pher, 1 kren'o-fər; 2 crŏn'o-fer, n. An instrument which is used for conveying time-indications to distant points by electricity. [< CHRONO- + Gr. pherō, bear.]

chron"o-pho'to-graph, 1 kren'o-fō'to-graf; 2 crŏn'o-fō'to-grăf, n. 1. A single photograph of a series taken at equal intervals on a moving sensitized surface, or a series of such photographs, as for exhibition in a kinematograph or for use in a scientific investigation of a moving object. 2. An apparatus for obtaining such pictures. chron"o-pho'to-gram‡.— chron"o-pho"to-graph'ic, a.— chron"o-pho-tog'ra-phy, n.

chron'o-scope, 1 kren'o-skōp; 2 crŏn'o-scōp, n. 1. A chronograph or other instrument for measuring a minute interval of time, as by a revolving indicator; often used for measuring the velocity of a shot, which is determined by the time it takes to pass between two screens, at each of which it breaks an electric circuit; also, for measuring the time of reaction in psychophysical experiments. 2. A form of clock which indicates the time by figures shown through holes in the dial. [< CHRONO- + -SCOPE.]— chron"o-scop'ic, a.— chron"o-scop'i-cal-ly, adv.— chro-nos'co-py, n. The art or process of using a chronoscope.— gravity chronoscope, an electrified apparatus for recording time by means of a plate moving downward between posts. The falling plate breaks an electric circuit but recompletes it as it continues its downward motion: used in psychophysics.— Hipp c., a clock whose hands are connected or disconnected with the actuating mechanism by means of an electric circuit: used for measuring reaction times.— Münsterberg's c. (Psychophysics), an apparatus capable of recording the one hundredth part of a second and controlled by the same mechanism as the ordinary stop-watch, and operated without electricity.— pendulum c., an apparatus for marking time, in which a pendulum adapted to swing along a scale is released when a stimulus is given by the breaking of an electric circuit and a pointer is attracted to the scale by an electromagnet when the subject reacts.— Vernier c., an apparatus for measuring the time of reaction to given stimuli. It consists of two pendulums, each connected with a key. The release of one followed by the release of the other in response to a clicking sound made by the key of the first will record reaction-time in units of 1/50 second each.

chro-nos'te-on, 1 kro-nes'ti-en; 2 cro-nŏs'te-ŏn, n. [-TE-A, pl.] The human temporal bone, as made up of distinct bones. [< CHRONO- + Gr. osteon, bone.]— chro-nos'te-al, a.

chro-nos'ti-chon, 1 kro-nes'ti-ken; 2 cro-nŏs'ti-cŏn, n. A line of poetry containing a chronogram. [< CHRONO- + Gr. stichos, line of poetry.]

chron"o-ther'mal, 1 kren'o-thûr'məl; 2 crŏn'o-thĕr'mal, a. Of or pertaining to both time and temperature.

chron"o-ther-mom'e-ter, 1 kren'o-thər-mem'i-tər; 2 crŏn'o-ther-mom'e-ter, n. 1. A thermometer with an anti-compensated or uncompensated balance-wheel, by the use of which mean temperature is determined. 2. An instrument for heating oil at a given rate per minute.

chro-not'ro-pism, 1 kro-net'ro-pizm; 2 cro-nŏt'ro-pişm, n. Any disturbance of or interference with valvular action, as the cardiac pulsation. [< CHRONO- + Gr. tropos, turn.]

Chron. Sax., abbr. See ABBREVIATION.

Chro"o-coc-ca'ce-æ, 1 krō"o-ke-kē'si-i; 2 crō"o-cŏ-că'çe-ē, n. pl. Bot. A family of unicellular blue-green algæ found in fresh or salt water. The cells are non-nuclear, and these algæ are ranked among the lowest forms of vegetable life. Chro"o-coc'cus, n. (t. ç.) [< Gr. chroa, color, + kokkos, berry.]— chro"o-coc-ca'ceous, a.

Chro-sper'ma, 1 kro-spûr'mə; 2 cro-spĕr'ma, n. Bot. A monotypic genus of herbs of the family Melanthaceæ. Its one species, C. muscætoxicum, the fly-poison, has long been known as Amianthium muscætoxicum. See FLY-POISON, 2, under FLY¹, n. [< Gr. chrōs, surface, color, + sperma, seed.]

Chrotta, from a copy of a drawing in the British Patent Office.

Frame (a, a, a), which was removed in the Middle Ages.

chrot'ta, 1 hrot'ə; 2 hrŏt'a, n. A six-stringed instrument of the viol type, a development of the crowd. The instrument was played with a bow, but two strings running free from the finger-board were played by plucking. In Italy the rim (a) was discarded, leaving the finger-board running free, and it became known as the vielle, from which (and the German form, the rota) the modern violin is descended.

Chru'dim, 1 krū'dim; 2 cru'dim, n. 1. A district in Bohemia. 2. Its capital.

chrys-, } 1 kris-, kris'o; 2 crĭs-, chrys'o-, } cris'o-. Derived from Greek chrysos, gold: combining forms.

chrys'al, 1 kris'əl; 2 crĭs'al, ri. Archery. To crack, as a bow. crys'al‡.

chrys'al, n. Archery. A crack or imperfection in a bow.

Chrys"sale', 1 kri'zāl'; 2 crĭ'săl', n. In Molière's Les Femmes Savantes, a simple, honest tradesman, henpecked by his wife, Philaminte.

chrys'a-lid, 1 kris'ə-lid; 2 crĭs'a-lid. I. a. Of, pertaining to, or like a chrysalis. chrys-al'i-dal‡; chrys"a-lid'i-an‡; chrys'a-line‡. II. n. A chrysalis.— chrysalid-robber, n. Same as CALOSOMA.

Chry-sal'i-do-car'pus, 1 kri-sal'i-do-kār'pus; 2 cry-săl'i-do-căr'pŭs, n. Bot. A genus of palms, consisting of only one species, C. lutescens. They are found in Madagascar, Mauritius, and Bourbon. [< CHRYSALIS + CARPUS.]

chrys'a-lis, 1 kris'ə-lis; 2 crĭs'a-lĭs, n. [-LIS-ES or -AL'I-DES, 1 -lis-ez, -al'i-diz; 2 -lis-ĕz, -ăl'i-dēz, pl.] 1. The pupa of an insect, as of a butterfly or moth; the inactive form enclosed in a case or shell from which the imago, or perfect insect, emerges. 2. An object in an undeveloped state or transitory stage of existence.

The imprisoned Chrysalis is now a winged Psyche.
CARLYLE Sartor Resartus bk. ii, p. 155. [H.]

chrys-am'mic, 1 kris-am'ik; 2 crĭs-ăm'ic, a. Chem. Designating a golden-colored dibasic tetra-nitro-crysophanic acid ($C_{14}H_2(NO_2)_4(OH)_2O_2$). It forms crystals and is soluble in water. [< Gr. chrysos, gold, + amma, sand.] chrys"am-min'ic‡.

chrys-am'pho-ra, 1 kris-am'fo-rə; 2 crĭs-ăm'fo-ra, n. Bot. A genus of California pitcher-plants of the family Sarraceniaceæ. The only species, C. californica, has long trumpet-shaped leaves, with a vaulted hood over the pitchers and nodding purplish flowers. [< CHRYS + AMPHORA.]

chrys-an'i-lin, } 1 kris-an'i-lin, -lin or -lin; 2 crĭs-ăn'i-lin, -lin or -lin, n. Chem. A coal-tar dyestuff ($C_{19}H_{11}N_3$), obtained from rosanilin, that gives a golden-yellow color. [< CHRYS- + ANILIN.]

chrys"a-nis'ic, 1 kris"ə-nis'ik; 2 crĭs"a-nis'ic, a. Designating an acid technically known as dinitroamidobenzoic ($C_7H_4N_2O_6$), forming golden-yellow scales, and used in dyeing. It is obtained by the action of nitric and anisic acids. [< Gr. chrysos, gold, + ANISIC.]

chrys-an'the-mine, 1 kris-an'thi-min; 2 crĭs-ăn'the-min, n. Chem. An alkaloid ($C_{14}H_{21}N_3O_3$) derived from the flowers of Chrysanthemum cinerariæfolium. It liquefies on exposure.

Chrysanthemums.

Chrys-an'the-mum, 1 kris-an'thi-mum; 2 crĭs-ăn'-the-mŭm, n. Bot. 1. A very large genus of perennial or annual herbaceous or slightly shrubby plants of the aster family (Compositæ) with usually large heads of showy reddish, white, or yellow flowers. 2. [c-] A plant or flower of this genus. The chrysanthemums of cultivation are derived mostly from C. sinense or indicum. [L., < Gr. chrysanthemon, < chrysos, gold. + anthemon, flower.]— chrys-an'the-mum-a"phis, n. An insect (Macrosiphum chrysanthemicola) infesting chrysanthemums.— c.-fly, n. The drone-fly.

chrys-an'thous, 1 kris-an'thus; 2 crĭs-ăn'thûs, a. Bot. Yellow-flowered. [< CHRYS- + Gr. anthos, flower.] chrys-an'the-mous‡.

Chry-sa'or, 1 krai-sē'er or kris'i-ər; 2 crĭ-sā'ŏr or crĭs'a-ŏr, n. Gr. Myth. 1. Poseidon's son, who sprang from the trunk of Medusa after her decapitation by Perseus. He married Callirrhoe, and to them were born Echidna and Geryon. 2. The sword of Artegal.

Chry-sa'o-ra, 1 krai-sē'o-rə; 2 cry-sā'o-ra, n. A genus of Medusæ of the family Pelagiadæ, which according to Haeckel formed a transitional stage between Pelagia and Dactylometra. [< Gr. chrysaoros, with golden sword, < chrysos, gold, + aor, sword.]

chrys"a-ro'bin, 1 kris"ə-rō'bin; 2 crĭs"a-rō'bin, n. 1. Goa powder. See POWDER. 2. An orange-yellow compound which forms the essential principle of Goa powder, and from which chrysophanic acid is derived. [< CHRYS- + Braz. Indian araroba, back.] chrys"a-ro'bi-num‡.

chrys"a-trop'ic, 1 kris"ə-trep'ik; 2 crĭs"a-trŏp'ic, a. Designating a product of the plant Atropa belladonna; as, chrysatropic acid ($C_{16}H_{23}O_4$), scopoletin. [< CHRYS- + ATROPIS.]

chry-sau'rin, 1 kri-sē'rin; 2 cry-sa'rin, n. Chem. A reddish-yellow coal-tar color. [< CHRYS- + L. aurum, gold.] chrysau'reint‡.

chrys'a-zin, 1 kris'ə-zin; 2 crĭs'a-zin, n. Chem. A dioxid of anthraquinone. [< Gr. chrysos, gold, + azōos, lifeless.]

chrys'e-an, 1 kris'i-ən; 2 crĭs'e-an, n. Chem. A compound ($C_4H_5N_3S_2$) obtained as shining yellow crystals by passing hydrogen-sulfid gas through a strong solution of potassium cyanid. [< Gr. chryseos, golden.]

chrys"e-in'ic, 1 kris"i-in'ik; 2 crĭs"e-in'ic, a. Pertaining to or characteristic of an acid ($NO_2C_{10}H_4ONa$), the sodium salt of dinitro-α-naphthol, used in dyeing campobello yellow. See under YELLOW.

Chry-se'is, 1 krai-si'is; 2 crĭ-sē'is, n. In Homer's Iliad, a daughter of Chryses, a priest of Apollo, held captive by Agamemnon.

chrys"el-e-phan'tine, 1 kris"el-i-fan'tin; 2 crĭs"ĕl-e-făn'tin, a. Made of or covered with gold and ivory; as, the Greek chryselephantine statues. These were of wood or clay, to which thin plates of chased gold were attached to represent draperies and hair, and ivory plates to represent flesh. [< Gr. chryselephantinos, of gold and ivory.]

Chrys'e-mys, 1 kris'i-mis; 2 crĭs'e-mĭs, n. Zool. A typical and widely distributed genus of water-tortoises or American terrapins, including the mud-turtle (C. picta), gaily ornamented on body and shell-margin with yellow, red, and black. [< CHRYS- + Gr. emys, tortoise.]

chrys'ene, 1 kris'in; 2 crĭs'ĕn, n. Chem. A reddish-violet, fluorescent, crystalline compound ($C_{18}H_{12}$), contained in coal-tar and other substances.— chry-sen'ic, a. Derived from chrysene or from chrysoquinone.— chrysenic acid (Chem.), an acid ($C_{17}H_{12}O_3$) obtained by fusing chrysene with caustic alkali.

chrys'e-o-lin, 1 kris'i-o-lin; 2 crĭs'e-o-lin, n. Same as TROPÆOLIN.

Chry-sid'i-dæ, 1 kri-sid'i-di; 2 cry-sid'i-dē, n. pl. Entom. A family of spiculiferous hymenopterous insects having the abdomen hanging from the thorax, concave below, and with only four or five visible segments: including the gold-wasps. Chrys'is, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. chrysis, a gold-broidered robe.] Chrys'i-des‡.— chrys'id, n.— chrys'i-did, a. & n. — chrys'i-doid, a.

chrys'i-din, 1 kris'i-din; 2 crĭs'i-din, n. Chem. Either of two bases ($C_{17}H_{11}N$) produced by treating benzyliden, α- and β- naphthalen with heat, by passing through a hot tube. [< Gr. chrysis, gold.]

chrys'in, 1 kris'in; 2 crĭs'in, n. Chem. A coloring-matter ($C_{15}H_{10}O_4$) found in the buds of the black poplar. [< Gr. chrysos, gold.]

Chry-sip'pus, 1 kri-sip'us; 2 cry-sip'ŭs, n. 1. A Stoic philosopher of the 3d century B. C., born at Soli, in Cilicia: said to have invented the sorites. Chry'sip-post [Gr.]. 2. An Oriental milkweed-butterfly (Danais chrysippus) notable for being "mimicked" by other butterflies.

chrys'o-, 1 kris'o-; 2 crĭs'o-. From Gr. chrysos, golden: a combining form. chrys"o-as'pid, n. A soldier distinguished by a shield adorned with gold.— Chrys"o-bal'a-nus, n. Bot. A genus of shrubs of the rose family (Rosaceæ), represented in the United States by C. oblongifolius and in the West Indies by C. icaco. Each of these is called cocoa-plum.— chrys'o-ber"yl, n. Mineral. A vitreous yellow-brown and variously shaded green, transparent to translucent glucinum aluminate ($GlAl_2O_4$). Called also cymophane and alexandrite. chrys-o-car'pous, a. Bot. Having golden or yellow fruit.— chrys"o-ce-trar'ic, a. Obtained from cetraria.— chrysocetraric acid, same as PINASTRIC ACID.— chrys'o-chlore, n. A gold-mole.— Chrys"o-chlo-rid'i-dæ, n. pl. Mam. A family of zalambdodont insectivores with a mole-like body, including the gold-moles. Chrys"o-chlo'ris, n. (t. g.) — chrys"o-chlo'rid, chrys"o-chlo'ri-did, n.— chrys"o-chlo'ri-doid, chrys"o-chlo'roid, a. & n.— chrys"o-chlo'rous, a. Of greenish-gold color.— chrys'o-chrous, a. Golden-yellow.— chrys"o-col'la, n. Mineral. 1. An opaline to earthy, vitreous, green-blue or black, translucent to opaque hydrous copper silicate. 2†. Borax.— chrys-oc'ra-cy, n. [Rare.] Plutocracy. chrys"o-ar"is-toc'ra-cy‡. chrys"o-cre-at'i-nin, n. Chem. A poisonous alkaloid, resembling creatinin, present in meat in the form of orange-yellow crystals. chrys'o-gen, n. A yellow crystalline compound derived from crude anthracene.— chrys"o-go-nid'i-um, n. [-I-A, pl.] Bot. A gonidium containing orange-yellow granules.— chrys'o-graph, n. A writing in letters of gold or of silver and gold.— chrys-og'ra-phy, n. 1. The art of illuminating with gold and silver ink, as on parchment in the middle ages. See ILLUMINATION. 2. The writing or illumination so executed. 3. Gr. Antiq. Embroidery or inlaying with gold.— chry-sol'din, n. Chem. A coal-tar dye that produces orange-yellow colors on cotton, wool, and silk. chry-sol'dine‡.— chrys'o-in, n. Chem. Resorcinal yellow. See YELLOW.— chrys"o-lep'ic, a. Having or resembling golden scales.— chrys'o-lin, n. Chem. A coal-tar dyestuff, derived from phthalic acid, that gives a fast yellow color on silk, wool, and cotton.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

chrys'o-lite, 1 kris'o-lait; 2 crĭs'o-lit, n. Mineral. 1. A brittle, vitreous, commonly olive-green, transparent to translucent magnesium iron silicate, $(MgFe)_2SiO_4$, that crystallizes in the orthorhombic system: used as a gem when transparent. Called also olivin and peridot.

The sunset's high-heaped gold,
Its crags of opal and of chrysolite.
LOWELL To the Future st. 1.

2. A yellow topaz. Rev. xxi, 20. 3†. The yellow chrysoberyl: a French use. [< F. chrysolithe, < L. chrysolithos, < Gr. chrysolithos, < chrysos, gold, + lithos, stone.] chrys'o-lith†; chrys'o-lyte†. — Ceylonese chrysolite, a yellowish-green tourmalin found in Ceylon: jewelers' cant. — Saxon c., a dark-colored true topaz found in Saxony. — chrys"o-lit'ic, a.

chrys-ol'o-gy, n. krīs-ŏl'o-jı; 2 crȳs-ŏl'o-ġy, n. [Rare.] A department of political economy that deals with the problems relating to gold or wealth.

Chry-sol'o-phus, n. krī-sŏl'o-fus; 2 cry-sŏl'o-fūs, n. Ornith. A genus of Phasianidæ, which includes the golden and the Lady Amherst's pheasants. [< Gr. chrysolophos, golden-crested.]

Chrys"o-lo'ras, n. krīs"o-lō'ræs; 2 crȳs"o-lō'ras, Manuel (1355?–1415). A Byzantine Greek scholar; restorer of Greek learning in Italy.

One of the Chrysomelidæ. Asparagus-beetle. ½

chrys'o-mag"net, n. A lodestone. — chrys'o-mel, n. A leaf-beetle or chrysomelid. — Chrys"o-mel'i-dæ, n. pl. Entom. An immense family of phytophagous beetles, including those with submentum not pedunculate, antennæ moderate, front small, tibial spurs usually absent, and tarsi dilated and spongy below; leaf-beetles. Chrys"o-me'la, n. (t. g.) — chrys"o-mel'id, a. & n. — chrys"o-melid'e-ous, chrys"o-mel'oid, a. — chrys-om'i-tra, n. Zooph. The free medusiform sexual bud of certain physophores (Velellidæ): formerly regarded as a genus. — chrys'o-pa, n. A lacewing fly (genus Chrysopa).

chrys-o'pal, 1 krīs-ō'pəl; 2 crȳs-ō'pal, n. Mineral. 1. An opalescent variety of chrysolite. 2†. Chrysoberyl.

Chrys"o-pe-tal'i-dæ, 1 krīs"o-pı-tal'ı-dē; 2 crȳs"o-pe-tăl'ı-dē, n. pl. Helminth. A family of polychætous worms found in Porto Rico. [< CHRYS- + Gr. petalon, leaf.]

chrys'o-phan, 1 krīs'o-fan; 2 crȳs'o-făn, n. An orange-yellow, crystalline, bitter glucoside compound ($C_{16}H_{18}O_8$) contained in rhubarb and decomposable into chrysophanic acid and sugar. [< Gr. chrysophanēs, shining, < chrysos, gold, + phainō, show.] chrys'o-phanet; chrys-oph'a-nin†; chrys-oph'e-nin†. — chrys"o-phan'ic, a. — chrysophanic acid, a yellow crystalline compound ($C_{15}H_{10}O_4$) found in rhubarb, the wall-lichen, senna-leaves, etc. Called also partetic acid, rhetic acid, rhein, rhubarbarin, dtozymethylanthraquinon.

chrys'o-phan-ate, 1 krīs'o-fan-ēt; 2 crȳs'o-făn-āt, n. A salt of chrysophan. — bismuth chrysophanate (Chem.), same as DERMOL.

Chry-soph'a-nus, 1 krī-sof'ə-nus; 2 cry-sŏf'a-nūs, n. Entom. A genus of small lycænid butterflies called coppers, from the orange or coppery tints of their wing-surfaces. [< Gr. chrysophanēs, shining.]

chry-soph'e-nin, 1 krī-sef'ı-nin; 2 cry-sŏf'e-nin, n. An orange-yellow dye obtained from coal-tar and used in dyeing unmordanted cotton by the aid of a salt bath. [< CHRYSO- + PHENYL.]

chry-soph'i-lite, 1 krī-sef'ı-lait; 2 cry-sŏf'i-lit, n. [Rare.] A lover of gold. [< CHRYSO- + philos, loving.] chry-soph'i-list†.

Chrys"o-phlec'tis, 1 krīs"o-flek'tıs; 2 crȳs"o-flĕc'tis, n. A genus of chytridiaceous fungi. Chrysophlectis endobiotica causes a destructive potato-disease in Europe and Newfoundland.

chrys'o-phyl, n. Same as XANTHOPHYL. — Chrys"o-phyl'lum, n. Bot. A genus of trees of the star-apple family (Sapotaceæ), mostly tropical American, with milky juice and coriaceous leaves covered with golden tomentum below. — chrys"o-phyr'ic, a. Petrol. Containing distinct crystals of chrysolite.

Chry-sop'i-dæ, 1 krī-sep'ı-dī; 2 cry-sŏp'ı-dē, n. Entom. A family of Neuroptera, the ill-smelling lace-winged flies, prevailingly green, with golden eyes. See APHIS-LION, under APHIS. Chrys'o-pa, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. chrysōps, gold-colored, < Gr. chrysos, gold, + ōps, face.] — chrys'o-pid, a. & n.

chrys"o-po-et'ic, 1 krīs'o-po-et'ık; 2 crȳs'o-po-ĕt'ic, a. Gold-making; transmuting into gold. — chrys"o-po-et'ics, n. The art of making gold.

chrys'o-prase, 1 krīs'o-prēz; 2 crȳs'o-prās, n. Mineral. 1. A semiprecious apple-green variety of chalcedony, colored by nickel oxid; sometimes used as a gem. 2. The green color of the chrysoprase. [F., < L. chrysoprasus, < Gr. chrysoprasos, < chrysos, gold, + prason, leek.] chrys'o-prast; chrys"o-pra'sus†.

Chrys'ops, 1 krīs'ops; 2 crȳs'ops, n. Entom. A large genus of small tabanid gadflies having a dark stripe across the wings, and of numerous species in North America, including the deer-flies. [< Gr. chrysōps, with golden eye.]

cin-cham'i-din, } 1 sin-kam'ı-din, -din or -dīn; 2 çin-cin-cham'i-dine, } cäm'i-din, -din or -dīn, n. Chem. A levorotatory compound ($C_{19}H_{24}N_2O$), one of the constituents of cinchona. [< CINCHONA + AMID.]

cin'chene, 1 sin'kīn; 2 çin'cēn, n. Chem. A white crystalline compound ($C_{19}H_{20}N_2$) obtained from the alkaloid cinchonin.

cin"cho-ce'ro-tin, 1 sin'ko-sı'ro-tin; 2 çin"co-cē'ro-tin, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_{32}H_{54}O+H_2O$) existing in cinchona. [< CINCHONA + CEROTE.]

cin'chol, 1 sin'kōl or -kol; 2 çin'cōl or -cŏl, n. Chem. An alcohol of true cinchona-bark ($C_{26}H_{44}O+H_2O$), resembling cholestrol. [< CINCHONA + -OL.]

cin'cho-lin, 1 sin'ko-lin; 2 çin'co-lin, n. Chem. A basic compound ($C_{10}H_{21}N_4$) obtained as an oily substance from the paraffin-oil of brown coal.

cin-cho'na, 1 sin-kō'nə; 2 çin-cō'na, n. 1. Med. Peruvian bark; Jesuits' bark. 2. [C-] Bot. A genus of valuable evergreen trees of the madder family, of the tropical valleys of the Andes. The bark yielded by several species is the Peruvian bark or cinchona-bark of commerce, the source of quinin. Extensive plantations are now under cultivation in various parts of India. 3. A tree of the genus Cinchona. [After the Countess of Chinchon, vice-queen of Peru, who was cured of a fever by cinchona-bark.] — cin"cho-na'ceous, a. Pertaining to cinchona.— cin"cho-nam'in, cin"cho-nam'ine, n. Chem. A crystalline poisonous alkaloid ($C_{19}H_{24}N_2O$) contained in cinchona-bark.— cin'cho-nate, n. Same as QUINATE.— cin-chon'ic, a. Belonging, pertaining to, or derived from cinchona; as, cinchonic acid. See QUINIC.— chinconic acid, a crystalline compound ($C_9H_8N_2CO_2H$) produced by oxidizing cinchonin or a like substance.— cin-chon'i-cin, cin-chon'i-cine, n. An artificial alkaloid ($C_{19}H_{22}N_2O$) derived from and isomeric with cinchonin.— cin-chon'i-din, cin-chon'i-dine, n. Chem. A crystalline bitter alkaloid ($C_{19}H_{22}N_2O$), isomeric with cinchonin but less powerful, and used medicinally. cin"cho-nid'i-at; cin-chon"i-di'na‡.— cin'cho-nin, cin'cho-nine, n. Chem. A crystalline alkaloid ($C_{19}H_{22}N_2O$), similar to cinchonidin, of which it is an isomer: used in medicine. cin-cho'ni-at‡.— cin"cho-nin'ic, a.— cin'cho-nism, n. An abnormal condition caused by overdoses of cinchona, characterized by buzzing in the head, giddiness, deafness, and temporary loss of sight.— cin'cho-nize, vt. Med. To bring under the influence of cinchona or quinin. cin'cho-nise‡.— cin"cho-ni-za'tion, n.— cin"cho-nol'o-gy, n. The study of the properties of cinchona-plants.— cin"cho-nom'e-try, n. The quantitative determination of quinin and other alkaloids in cinchona-bark.— cin"cho-tan'nic, a. Chem. Pertaining to tannin as contained in cinchona-bark. quin"o-tan'nic‡.— cinchotannic acid, a variety of tannin ($C_{42}H_{36}O_{23}$) extracted from cinchona-bark. cin"cho-tan'nin‡.— cin-chot'e-nin, cin-chot'e-nine, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_{18}H_{20}N_2O_2$) formed by oxidizing cinchonin with potassium permanganate.— cin'cho-tin, cin'cho-tine, n. Chem. An almost insoluble crystalline alkaloid ($C_{19}H_{24}N_2O$), derived from cinchona.— cin"cho-tox'in, cin"cho-tox'ine, n. Same as CINCHONICIN.— cin"cho-va'tin, cin"cho-va'tine, n. Same as ARICIN.

cin-cin'nal, 1 sin-sin'əl; 2 çin-çin'al, a. Of, pertaining to, or like a cincinnus. ci-cin'nal‡.

cin-cin'nate, 1 sin-sin'it; 2 çin-çin'at, a. [Rare.] Curled in ringlets. [< L. cincinnus, curl.]

Cin"cin-na'ti', 1 sin"sı-nə'tı; 2 çin"çi-nā'ti, n. 1. A manufacturing city; county-seat of Hamilton county, Ohio; on Ohio river; seat of Lane Theological Seminary (Presbyterian), founded in 1829, and University of Cincinnati (nonsectarian), founded in 1870. 2. A town in Appanoose county, Ia.— Cin"cin-nat'i-an. I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to Cincinnati. 2. Geol. Of or pertaining to the uppermost of the series of strata comprised in the Ordovician system in North America, following the Mohawkian series and succeeded by the Silurian system, or to the corresponding stage of the Ordovician period. II. n. 1. An inhabitant of Cincinnati. 2. Geol. The Cincinnatian series of strata; also, the Cincinnatian stage. [< Cincinnati, Ohio.]

Cincinnati, Society of the. See under SOCIETY.

Cin"cin-na'to, 1 chĭn"chĭn-nū'to; 2 chĭn'chĭn-nä'to, Romulo (1502–1600). An Italian painter.

Cin"cin-na'tus, 1 sin"sı-nē'tʊs; 2 çin'çi-nā'tŭs, Lucius Quinctius (519?–439 B. C.). A Roman patrician farmer, patriot, and dictator.

cin-cin'nu-lus, 1 sin-sin'yu-lʊs; 2 çin-çin'yu-lŭs, n. [-LI, 1 -lı; 2 -lī, pl.] Crust. One of the small hooks attached to the stylamblys. [Dim. < L. cincinnus, curl.]

cin-cin'nus, 1 sin-sin'ʊs; 2 çin-çin'ŭs, n. Bot. A form of sympodial branching in which the lateral axes arise alternately on opposite sides of a relatively main axis: usually applied to a flower-cluster. [L., curl.] ci-cin'nus‡.

Cin'cli-dæ, 1 sin'klı-dī; 2 çin'cli-dē, n. pl. Ornith. A family of oscine birds, including the dippers or water-ouzels. Cin'clus, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. kinklos, a wagtail.] — cin'clid, n. — cin'cloid, a.

cin'clis, 1 sinj'klis; 2 çinj'clis, n. [CIN'CLI-DES, 1 -dīz; 2 -dēs, pl.] Zooph. An orifice for the protrusion of acontia, as in sea-anemones. [< Gr. kinklis, latticed gate.]

cin'cli-sis, 1 sinj'klı-sis; 2 çinj'cli-sis, n. Pathol. Rapid, spasmodic movement or agitation, as of the eyelids, or of the chest in asthma. [< Gr. kinklisis, < kinklos, the wagtail.] [encircled.

cinct, 1 sinkt; 2 çinct, a. [Rare.] Bound around; girded; cinc"to-plan'u-la, 1 sinj'kto-plan'yu-lə; 2 çinc'to-plăn'yu-la, n. Spong. A planula having a girdle or collar of flagella. [< L. cinctus, pp. of cingo, gird, + PLANULA.] — cinc"to-plan'u-lar, a.

cinc'ture, 1 sinjk'chur or -tiur; 2 çinc'chur or -tŭr, tr. [-TURED; -TUR-ING.] To surround with or as with a cincture; gird; encompass.

> The women cinctured with a woof of painted feathers or a deer-skin apron. BANCROFT United States vol. i, pt. i, p. 33. [A. 1883.]

cinc'ture, n. 1. Something bound about the waist; a belt or girdle: extended to mean any deep covering about the loins; as, the savages wore a cincture of leaves.

> She unbound The cincture from beneath her breast.
> COLERIDGE Christabel pt. i, st. 29.

2. Figuratively, anything that encircles, encompasses, or encloses; as, a cincture of battlemented walls; also, the act of cincturing or compassing. 3. Arch. A raised ring or list dividing a shaft from its capital or from its base. [< L. cinctura, < cinctus, pp. of cingo, gird.]

cin'der, 1 sin'dər; 2 çin'der, vt. To burn or reduce to a cinder.

cin'der, } n. 1. Any partly burned combustible substance, sin'der‡, } or a bit of such substance, after the inflammable gas has been driven from it by heat and before it has been reduced to ashes, especially when combustion has entirely ceased; a thoroughly charred bit of wood, coal, paper, or the like.

> The true sense is 'that which flows'; hence 'the dross or slag of a forge'; and hence 'cinder' in the modern sense.
> SKEAT Etym. Dict.

> Like a red and burning cinder.
> LONGFELLOW Hiawatha pt. v, st. 14.

> When rain or moisture from any source descends with the cinders, the mass forms tufa. DANA Geology p. 723. [r. n. & co. 1880.]

4. [Slang, Eng.] Brandy or other strong liquor taken in soda-water, tea, etc. [Prop. sinder, < AS. sinder; cp. Ice. sindr, G. sinter, dross.] — buckshot cinder, cinder from blasting-furnaces impregnated with iron particles.— cin'der-bed", n. 1. A bed of cinders. 2. A loose stratum of marine shells in the Upper Purbeck series.— c.-block, n. Metal. A block situated at the front of a blast furnace containing the cinder-notch.— c.-box, n. The removable box connected with the boiler of a locomotive into which the cinders fall and are easily removed.— c.-cone, n. A conical elevation resulting from volcanic deposition of cinders.— c.-frame, n. A wire framework used in locomotives to prevent the flying of cinders.— c.-notch, n. Metal. A notch in the top of a blast-furnace dam to let the slag run off. — c. pig, pig iron made from ore mixed with slag.— c.-plate, n. The metal plate of a furnace on which the cinders settle.— c.-tap, n. The opening of a furnace through which the cinders are removed.— c.-tub, n. A small iron truck for catching the cinders from a furnace.— c.-wool, n. Mineral wool; slag-wool.— cin'der-ous, a. Of, like, or characteristic of a cinder. cin'drous‡.— cin'der-y, a. Of the nature of cinder; abounding in cinders; also, begrimed with cinders.

Cin"der-el'la, 1 sin'dər-el'ə; 2 çin'der-ĕl'a, n. 1. Heroine of an ancient fairy-tale known to Strabo (A. D. 21), and said to be of Eastern origin. Cinderella is a stepdaughter and is assigned to the most menial tasks. She is arrayed for the prince's ball by her fairy godmother, who warns her to leave at midnight. sisters. 2. A household drudge; kitchen-maid. 3. [Eng.] A dance kept up till midnight. [F. cendrillon, little cinder-girl.]

cin"e-fac'tion†, n. Reduction to ashes.

cin'e-ma, 1 sin'ə-mə; 2 çin'e-ma, n. [Eng.] A motion-picture; picture-play. [Abbr. of CINEMATOGRAPH.]

cin"e-mat'ic, etc. Same as KINEMATIC, etc.

cin"e-mat'o-graph, 1 sin'i-mat'o-grəf; 2 çin'e-māt'o-gráf, n. Same as KINETOGRAPH: the form in general use in France: applied especially in the United States to a form of apparatus introduced from France for making a continuous record of the motion of a body. [< Gr. kinēma(t-), movement, + graphō, write.] — cin"e-ma-tog'ra-pher, n. — cin"e-mat"o-graph'ic, a. — cin"e-mat"o-graph'i-cal-ly, adv. — cin"e-ma-tog'ra-phy, n.

ci-ne'mo-graph, 1 si-nī'mo-grəf; 2 çi-nē'mo-gráf, n. Meteor. A variety of anemometer. See ANEMOCINEMOGRAPH. [< Gr. kinēma, movement, + graphō, write.]

ci-nen'chy-ma, 1 si-neŋ'ki-mə; 2 çi-nĕŋ'ey-ma, n. Bot. Laticiferous tissue. [< Gr. kinein, move, + enchyma, infusion, < en, in, + cheō, pour.] — cin"en-chym'a-tous, a.

ci-nene', 1 si-nīn'; 2 çi-nēn', n. Chem. A liquid terpene ($C_{20}H_{32}$), occurring in oleum cinæ, having a lemon-like odor. [< CINNAMON.]

cin'e-neg"a-tive, } 1 sin'i-neg'ə-tiv; 2 çin'e-nĕg'a-tiv, n. A cin'e-neg"a-tiv[s], } film of cinematographic negatives. [< Gr. kineō, move, + NEGATIVE.]

cin'e-o-graph, 1 sin'i-o-grəf; 2 çin'e-o-gráf, n. A kineograph.

cin'e-ol, 1 sin'i-ōl or -el; 2 çin'e-ōl or -ŏl, n. Chem. A pleasant camphoraceous liquid ($C_{10}H_{18}O$), the mother-substance of wormseed, cajuput, and eucalyptus-oil. [< CINNAMON (Cinnamomum camphora, the camphor-tree) + -OL.]

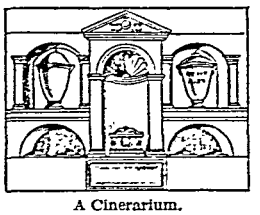
cin"er-a'ceous, 1 sin"ər-ē'shus; 2 çin'er-ā'shŭs, a. Of or like ashes; ash-colored. [< L. cineraceus, < cinis (ciner-), ashes.]

Cin"e-ra'ri-a, 1 sin'i-rē'ri-ə; 2 çin'e-rā'ri-a, n. 1. Bot. A genus of mostly South-African herbs or small shrubs of the aster family. 2. [c-] A florists' name for Senecio cruentus, formerly called Cineraria cruenta, a showy white- or purple-flowered species in cultivation, from the Canary Islands. [< L. cinerarius, of ashes, < cinis (ciner-), ashes.]

cin"e-ra'ri-um, 1 sin'i-rē'ri-um; 2 çin'e-rā'ri-ŭm, n. [-RI-A, pl.] [L.] Rom. Antiq. A niche in a tomb for a cinerary urn or a sarcophagus.



A Cinerarium.

cin'er-a-ry, 1 sin'ər-ē-ri; 2 çin'er-ā-ry, a. Of, relating to, or containing ashes. [< L. cinerarius; see CINERARIA.] — cinerary urn, an urn to hold the ashes of the cremated dead.

cin"er-a'tion, 1 sin"ər-ē'shən; 2 çin'er-ā'shon, n. Reduction to ashes; cremation; incineration.

cin'er-a"tor, 1 sin'ər-ē'tər; 2 çin'er-ā'tŏr, n. A furnace for cremating dead bodies.

ci-ne're-a, 1 si-nī'ri-ə; 2 çi-nē're-a, n. 1. Anat. The gray matter of the nervous centers. 2. A cinereal material, as a fertilizer. [< L. cinereus, ashy, < cinis (ciner-), ashes.]

ci-ne're-al, 1 si-nī'ri-əl; 2 çi-nē're-al, a. 1. Of or pertaining to the cinerea. 2. Cinereous. 3. Of or pertaining to cinder or ashes; making ashes; as, cinereal plant-elements. 4†. Cinerary.

ci-ne're-ous, 1 si-nī'ri-us; 2 çi-nē're-ŭs, a. Having the color of ashes; ash-gray; ashen; resembling ashes.

cin"er-es'cent, 1 sin'ər-es'ənt; 2 çin'er-ĕs'ĕnt, a. Turning to ash-color; grayish. [< LL. cineresces(t-)s, ppr. of cineresco, turn to ashes, < L. cinis (ciner-), ashes.]

cin"er-i'tious, 1 sin"ər-ish'us; 2 çin'er-ish'ŭs, a. Of the nature of ashes; ashen; ash-gray: said specifically of the gray or ash-colored brain- or nerve-substance.

ci-ner'u-lent†, a. Abounding in ashes.

ci-ne"si-ol'o-gy, 1 si-nī'si-el'o-ji; 2 çi-nē'si-el'o-ğy, n. Same as KINESIOLOGY.

ci-ne'sis, 1 si-nī'sis; 2 çi-nē'sis, n. Same as KINESIS.

ci-net"o-scop'ic, 1 si-net'o-skep'ik; 2 çi-nĕt'o-scŏp'ic, a. Same as KINETOSCOPIC.

Cin"ga-lese', a. & n. Same as SINGHALESE.

cin'gle, 1 siŋ'gl; 2 çiŋ'gl, n. A girth or belt. [< OF. cengle, < L. cingula, < cingo, gird.]

Cin'go-li, 1 chin'go-li; 2 chin'ğo-li, n. A town in Macerata province, Marches, Italy. [circular; annular.

cin'gu-lar, 1 siŋ'giu-lər; 2 çiŋ'ğū-lar, a. 1. Forming a circle; The ring peculiar to Bethlehem is a silver wedding-ring; it is a broad and cingular band of silver with pendants, and is worn upon the thumb. CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER In the Levant ch. 6, p. 121. [J. R. O. 1877.]

2. Pertaining to or characteristic of the enamel band or cingulum of a tooth at its base. [< L. cingulum; see CINGULUM.]

cin'gu-late, 1 siŋ'giu-lēt; 2 çiŋ'ğū-lāt, a. Having colored or other bands, as an insect. cin'gu-lat"ed†.

cin'gu-lum, 1 siŋ'giu-lum; 2 çiŋ'ğū-lŭm, n. [-LA, pl.] 1. A band, zone, or girdle, as of the carapace of an armadillo, of a tooth near the gum, the clitellum of an earthworm, or a raised spiral line on certain univalves. 2. A bundle of commissural fibers that lie in the gyrus fornicatus, and connect the callosal and hippocampal convolutions of the brain. 3. The waist-girdle confining the alb of a priest. [L., < cingo, gird.]

Cin"i-flon'i-dæ, 1 sin'i-flon'i-di; 2 çin'i-flŏn'i-dē, n. pl. Arach. A family of tubitelarian spiders with cribellum and calamistrum. Cin'i-flo, n. (t. g.) [< L. cinifl(o-), hair-curler, perhaps < cinis, ashes, + flo, blow.] — ci-nif'lo-nid, a. & n.

Cin'na, 1 sin'ə; 2 çin'a, n. 1. Calus Helvius, a Roman poet, killed by a mob, who mistook him for L. Cornelius Cinna, on the day of Cæsar's funeral. 2. Lucius Cornelius (–84 B. C.), a Roman consul. 3. L. Cornelius, son of preceding, pretor, conspirator against Cæsar.

cin'na-bar, 1 sin'ə-bär; 2 çin'a-bar, n. Mineral. A crystallized or massive, hexagonal, adamantine to metallic, cochineal-red to lead-gray mercury sulfid (HgS). It is the chief ore of mercury, originally used as a pigment, called vermilion. [< L. cinnabaris, < Gr. kinnabari, cinnabar.] cin'o-pert. — Austrian cinnabar, (Dyeing), chrome red. See under RED. — cin'na-bar-moth", n.

Cinnabar-moth. 7/10

cin'na-bar"line, 1 sin'ə-bär'in; 2 çin'a-bar'in, a. Consisting of, containing, or having a resemblance to cinnabar. cin"na-bar'ic†.

cin'na-mate, 1 sin'ə-mēt; 2 çin'a-māt, n. A salt of cinnamic acid.

cin"na-me'in, 1 sin'ə-mi'in; 2 çin'a-mē'in, n. Chem. A colorless oily compound ($C_{18}H_{14}O_2$) derived from balsams of Peru and Tolu. Called also benzyl cinnamate.

cin'na-mene, 1 sin'ə-min; 2 çin'a-mēn, n. Chem. Same as STYRENE. cin'na-mal‡.

cin-nam'ic, 1 si-nam'ik; 2 çi-năm'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or derived from cinnamon. cin"na-mon'ic‡. — cinnamic acid, a colorless, crystalline, volatile compound ($C_9H_8O_2$) contained in balsams of Peru, Tolu, etc., and formed synthetically by the oxidation of cinnamic aldehyde.

Cin"na-mo-den'dron, 1 sin'ə-mo-den'drən; 2 çin'a-mo-dĕn'dron, n. Bot. A genus of tropical American trees of the family Canellaceæ, with aromatic bark used as a tonic and an antiscorbutic. [< CINNAMON + Gr. dendron, tree.]

cin"na-mo'me-ous, 1 sin'ə-mō'mi-us; 2 çin'a-mō'me-ŭs, a. Of the nature or the color of cinnamon.

Cin"na-mo'mum, 1 sin'ə-mō'mum; 2 çin'a-mō'mŭm, n. [L.] Bot. A considerable genus of trees of the laurel family, mostly natives of tropical Asia, with thick, 3–5-ribbed evergreen leaves, and aromatic bark. C. zeylanicum furnishes the cinnamon-bark, and C. cassia the cassia-bark of commerce.

cin'na-mon, 1 sin'ə-mən; 2 çin'a-mon, n. 1. (1) The pale yellowish-brown strongly aromatic inner bark of Cinnamomum zeylanicum, dried in the sun, and used as a spice, carminative, etc.; Ceylon cinnamon. (2) Cassia; Chinese cinnamon. 2. A tree that yields cinnamon; especially, Cinnamomum zeylanicum, cultivated in Ceylon, Java, etc. 3. A cinnamon bear. [< F. cinnamome, < L. cinnamomum, < Gr. kinnamōmon, < Heb. qinnāmōn, cinnamon.] cyn'na-mome†. — black cinnamon, same as BAYBERRY, 3. — c.-bear, a cinnamon-colored variety of (1) the grizzly or (2) the American black bear. — cin'na-mon-fern", n. A densely tufted large fern (Osmunda cinnamomea) with cinnamon-colored sporangia. — c.-root, n. The plowman's spikenard. — c. rose, a very fragrant European pink rose (Rosa cinnamomea). — c.-sedge, n. The sweet-flag. — c.-stone, n. Mineral. A cinnamon-colored garnet. ces'so-nite†; cin'na-mite‡; hes'so-nite‡. — c.-suet, n. A fatty substance extracted from the ripened fruits of the Ceylon cinnamon (Cinnamomum zeylanicum). — c.-vine, n. Bot. A dioscoreaceous climbing plant (Dioscorea diaticata) native in the Philippines, with large tuberous roots, cordate leaves, and cinnamon-scented white flowers. — c.-wood, n. [U. S.] Sassafras. — Santa Fé c., the ishpingo (Nectandra cinnamomoides).

Cinnamon.

1. Flowering branch of Cinnamomum zeylanicum. 2. Cinnamon-bark, prepared for market.

cin"na-mon-ic, a. Same as CINNAMIC.

cin'na-myl, 1 sin'ə-mil; 2 çin'a-mŷl, n. Chem. An organic radical (C_9H_7O) contained in cinnamic acid, etc.; styryl. [< CINNAMIC + -YL.]

cin"na-myl'i-dene, 1 sin'ə-mil'i-din; 2 çin'a-mŷl'i-dēn, n. Chem. A bivalent radical in cinnamic compounds.

Cin'ne-roth, } 1 sin'i-reth or -rōth; 2 çin'e-rŏth or -rōth, n.

cin'no-line, } Chem. A hypothetical base (C_9H_7N) analogous to quinolin, known by its compounds. [< CINNAMIC + -lin in QUINOLIN.]

cin'nyl, 1 sin'il; 2 çin'yl, n. Chem. Same as CINNAMYL.

Cin-nyr'i-dæ, 1 si-nir'i-di; 2 çi-nŷr'i-dē, n. pl. Ornith. The Nectariniidæ. Cin'ny-ris, n. (t. g.) — cin'ny-rid, n. — cin'ny-roid, a.

ci-nom'e-try, 1 si-nem'i-tri; 2 çi-nŏm'e-try, n. Same as KINOMETRY.

Cin"o-ster'ni-dæ, 1 sin'o-stūr'ni-di; 2 çin'o-stĕr'ni-dē, n. pl. Herp. A family of testudinoidean tortoises, especially those having a nuchal bone with cistiform processes and 8 plastral bones. Cin"o-ster'num, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. kinoō, move, + sternon, breast-bone.] Kin"o-ster'ni-dæ‡. — cin"o-ster'nid, n. — cin"o-ster'noid, a. & n.

cinq"-cents', 1 saŋ'-sāŋ'; 2 çaŋ'-çāŋ', n. Card-playing. A game resembling bézique played with a deck of 32 cards. Quint major scores 120, and 500 points make the game.

Cinq"-Mars', 1 saŋ'-mār'; 2 çaŋ'-mār', Marquis de (1620–9/11 1642). Henri Coiffier de Ruzé, a French courtier, charged with conspiracy and executed at Lyons.

cin-quain', 1 siŋ-kēn'; 2 çiŋ-kān', n. [F.] A group of five. (1) A stanza of five lines. (2) In old tactics, five battalions so drawn up as to have a van, a main body, and a reserve.

cinque, 1 siŋk; 2 çiŋk, n. 1. The number five, especially in dice and other games; also, the throw which turns up five. 2. pl. The changes capable of being rung on eleven bells: so named because five pairs of bells take new places in the order of ringing at each change. [< F. cinq, < L. quinque, five.] cynk†; sink†. — cinque'-pace", n. An old French dance with a five-step movement. — cinque point, in backgammon, the five point; on a player's home table, the fifth point from the outer edge. — C. Ports, a group of southern English towns, originally five seaports (Hastings, Sandwich, Dover, Romney, and Hythe) which received important privileges for furnishing many war-ships. Winchelsea and Rye were added later. — c.-spotted, a. [Rare.] Five-spotted.

cin"que-cen'to, 1 chin"kwē-chen'to; 2 chiŋ"kwe-chĕn'to, n. [It.] The 16th century, especially with reference to Italy, or its art and literature; the Renaissance. — cin"que-cen'tist, n. An Italian artist or writer of the 16th century; also, an imitator or student of 16th-century art or style.

cin"que-de'a, 1 chiŋ'kā-dē'ə; 2 chiŋ'ke-dē'a, n. [It.] A small sword with a double edge, formerly fashionable in Venice.

cinque'foil, 1 siŋk'fōil; 2 çiŋk'fŏil, n. 1. Arch. A five-cusped ornament or window in the Pointed style; a five-leaved rosette. 2. Bot. Any one of several species of plants of the genus Potentilla, with quinate leaves, especially P. canadensis and P. argentea; fivefinger. 3. Her. A five-leaved clover. [< F. quintefeuille, < L. quinquefolium, plant, < quinque, five, + folium, leaf.] cinq'foil‡; quinte'foil‡. — purple cinquefoil, same as MARSH-CINQUEFOIL (Comarum palustre). — cinque'foiled, a. Furnished with cinquefoils, or shaped like a cinquefoil.

Ci-nu'il-a, 1 si-nū'li-ə; 2 çi-nū'il-a, n. A genus of fossil mollusks belonging to the Opisthobranchiata, found in rocks of the Cretaceous period.

Ci-nu'ra, 1 si-nū'rə; 2 çi-nū'ra, n. pl. Entom. A suborder or other group of thysanurous insects. [< Gr. kinourēs, shaking the tail, < kineō, move, + oura, tail.] — ci-nu'ran, n. — ci-nu'rous, a.

Ci-ol'dæ, 1 sai-el'di; 2 çi-ŏl'dē, n. pl. A family of serricorn beetles having 4-jointed tarsi and antennæ mostly clavate. [< CIS.] — ci'old, a. & n.

ci'on, 1 sai'ən; 2 çi'on, n. [Rare.] Anat. The soft palate; uvula. [< Gr. kiōn.]

ci'on, 2, n. A scion, or a sprout: a form favored by some horticulturists.

ci"o-ni'tis, 1 sai"o-nai'tis or -ni'tis; 2 çi"o-ni'tis or -ni'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the uvula.

Ci"o-no-cra'ni-a, 1 sai"o-no-krē'ni-ə; 2 çi"o-no-crā'ni-a, n. pl. Herp. A primary group of saurians having a columella to the skull. [< Gr. kiōn, column, + kranion, skull.] Ki"o-no-cra'ni-a‡. — ci"o-no-cra'ni-al, -ni-an, a.

ci"o-nop-to'sis, 1 sai"o-nep-tō'sis; 2 çi"o-nŏp-tō'sis, n. Elongation of the uvula. [< CION[1] + PTOSIS.]

ci-on'o-tome, 1 sai-on'o-tōm; 2 çi-ón'o-tōm, n. An instrument for cutting the uvula. [< CION[1] + -TOME.] — ci"o-not'o-my, n.

Ci"o'tat', La. See LA CIOTAT.

Ci-pan'go, 1 si-pan'go; 2 çi-păn'go, n. An island described by Marco Polo, as in Eastern seas, 1,500 miles from land; identified by some with Japan.

ci'pher, } 1 sai'fər; 2 çi'fer, r. I. t. 1. To work out ci'fer[s], } with arithmetical figures; calculate arithmetically. 2. [Colloq.] To reason out; determine; as, to cipher out a person's motives. 3. To write in characters of hidden meaning. 4. To give a cipher to, as in the score of a game. 5†. To express or make known by signs; express by a monogram, or the like. 6†. To decipher.

II. i. 1. To work arithmetical examples with figures. 2. To sound independently of the player: said of an organ-pipe. 3. [Local, U. S.] To search for a lost trail in fox-hunting: said of dogs. 4. [Local, U. S.] To go on three legs, as a dog. — ci'pher-a-bl(e[r], a. Capable of being ciphered. — ci'pher-er, n. One who ciphers or writes in cipher.

ci'pher, n. 1. The character 0, the symbol of zero or the absence of quantity, in numerical notation. Placed on the left of the decimal-point, a cipher increases tenfold the value of the figures at its left; placed on the right, it decreases tenfold the value of the figures at its right. A cipher also makes the expression of which it is the exponent equal to one or unity.

Cipher is the Arabic 'cipron,' which means empty, a translation of the Sanskrit name of the nought, 'sunya.' MAX MÜLLER Chips vol. ii, p. 284. [s. 1873.]

2. A person or thing of no value or importance. 3. A method of writing by characters or words understood only by those concerned; cryptography; also, anything so written; a cryptogram.

We cannot learn the cipher That's writ upon our cell. EMERSON The World-Soul st. 6.

4. The key to a secret method of writing.

I found, among those Children of the Sun, The cipher of my nature. BAYARD TAYLOR L'Envoi st. 4.

5. A character consisting usually of two or more interwoven or interlaced letters; a monogram. 6. [Rare.] Any numerical character; a number. 7. The continued sounding of an organ-pipe while the key is not pressed: due to the imperfect working of a valve. 8†. Any written character. [< F. chiffre, < LL. cifra, < Ar. sifr, < safara, be empty.] cy'pher‡. — ci'pher-key", n. Same as CIPHER, n., 4. — c.-tunnel, n. [Rare.] A sham chimney. — ci'pher, a. — ci'pher-hood, n. The state or condition of being a cipher.

ci'ferd[s], } beveled edges presenting a flush exterior: said of ships' planking. sy'phered‡.

Cip'i-ount, n. Scipio. CHAUCER Rom. of R. l. 10.

cip'o-lin, 1 sip'o-lin; 2 çip'o-lin, n. [F.] An impure Italian marble having layers alternating white and green. cip"o-li'no‡.

cip'pus, 1 sip'us; 2 çip'ŭs, n. [CIP'PI, 1 -ai; 2 -i, pl.] [L.] 1. Rom. Antiq. (1) A short stone pillar, used as a boundary-mark, as a burial-monument, or as a tablet for public notices, etc. (2) A military palisade. 2†. The stocks.

Ci"pri-a'ni, 1 chi"pri-ā'ni; 2 chi"pri-ā'ni. Giovanni Battista (1732?–12/11 1785). An Italian painter and engraver in London.

Ci"pri-a'no, n. [It. & Sp.] See CYPRIAN.

Cip'rist, n. Venus. CHAUCER Fame ii, 10.

cir., abbr. Circumference. circ.‡.

cir., circ., abbr. See ABBREVIATION.

Ci-ra'ma, 1 si-rē'mə or sir'ə-mə; 2 çi-rā'ma or çir'a-ma, n. Bib. (Apocrypha). 1 Esd. v, 20.

circ, 1 sūrk; 2 çirc, n. Same as CIRQUE.

cir'ca, 1 sūr'kə; 2 çir'ca, adv. & prep. [L.] About; around: used chiefly with dates, to express uncertainty; as, circa 400 B. C.

Cir-cæ'a, 1 sər-si'ə; 2 çir-çē'a, n. Bot. A small genus of low perennial herbs of the evening-primrose family, with small bur-like and bristly fruit with hooked hairs. C. lutetiana is the enchanter's nightshade. [< CIRCE.]

Cir-cæ'an, 1 sər-si'ən; 2 çir-çē'an, n. Same as CIRCEAN.

Cir-ca'e-tus, 1 sər-kē'i-tus; 2 çir-cā'e-tŭs, n. Ornith. A genus of large European accipitrine birds classed between the eagles and the harriers. [< Gr. kirkos, hawk, + aetos, eagle.]

cir-car', 1 sər-kār'; 2 çir-cār', n. [Anglo-Ind.] In India, a province or division of territory under the Mogul rule.

Cir-cars', pl. A former division of Madras, including the districts of Kistna, Godavari, Vizagapatam, Ganjam, and part of Nellore: 17,000 sq. m. North'ern Cir-cars'‡.

Cir-cas'si-a, 1 sər-kash'i-ə; 2 çir-cāsh'i-a, n. A former country, N. W. of Caucasus mountains, now part of the Kuban Republic (Russia).

Cir-cas'sian, 1 sər-kash'ən; 2 çir-cāsh'an. I. a. Of or pertaining to Circassia. Cir-cas'sic‡. II. n. 1. A native or naturalized inhabitant of Circassia. See plate at MAN, fig. 17. 2. The Circassian language. 3. [c-] Circassienne. 4. A twilled textile fabric formed of wool and cotton in combination.— Circassian seeds, seeds of the red sandalwood tree; used in the East for necklaces and other ornaments.

cir-cas"si-enne', 1 sər-kas'ı-en'; 2 çir-căs'i-ĕn', n. [F.] A variety of light cashmere.

Cir'ce, 1 sûr'si; 2 çir'çē, n. Gr. Myth. A semidivine enchantress described in the Odyssey as transforming the companions of Ulysses into swine by means of a magic drink. Kir'kē† [Gr.].— Circe of the Revolution, Madame Roland (1754–1793): in recognition of her power over the Girondist leaders in the French Revolution.

Cir-ce'an, 1 sər-si'ən; 2 çir-çē'an, a. 1. Gr. Myth. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of Circe. 2. Bewitching and degrading.

The four years during which I was under the Circean spells of opium. DE QUINCEY Opium-Eater p. 108. [T. & F. 1852.]

cir-cen'sian, 1 sər-sen'shən; 2 çir-çĕn'shan, a. Of or pertaining to the Roman circus; as, circensian games. [< L. circensis, < circus, circus.] cir-cen'sial†.

Cir-ci'næ, 1 sər-sai'nī; 2 çir-çī'nē, n. pl. Ornith. A subfamily of buteonine Falconidæ, having a beak with a sinuous margin, imperfect facial disk, and long wings and legs; the harriers. [< CIRCUS.]

cir'ci-nal, 1 sûr'si-nəl; 2 çir'çi-nal, a. 1. Entom. Coiled back upon itself, as the proboscis of a butterfly. 2. Bot. Circinate. [< L. circinus; see CIRCINATE, a.] cir'ci-nate†, vt. & vi. To make a circle (on) with compasses.

cir'ci-nate, 1 sûr'si-nēt; 2 çir'çi-nāt, a. Bot. Rolled inward from the apex into a coil: applied to organs in vernation, as in ferns. [< L. circinatus, pp. of circino, make round, < circinus, compasses, < Gr. kirkinos, < kirkos, circle.] cir'ci-nat"ing†; cir'cin-nate†.— cir'ci-nate-ly, adv.— cir"ci-na'tion, n. 1. Bot. The condition of being circinate. See CONVOLUTE. 2†. A circling.

cir'cine, 1 sûr'sin; 2 çir'çin. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Circinæ. II. n. One of the Circinæ.

cir'cin"gle, n. Same as SURCINGLE.

Cir'ci-nus, 1 sûr'si-nus; 2 çir'çi-nūs, n. Astron. The Compasses: a southern constellation. See CONSTELLATION.

cir'cle, 1 sûr'kl, 2 çir'çl, v. [CIR'CLED, CIR'CLD[F]; CIR'CLF, ∫ CLING.] I. t. 1. To enclose with or as with a circle; surround; encompass; encircle.

A power . . . whose morning drum-beat, following the sun, . . . circles the earth with one continuous . . . strain of the martial airs of England. D. WEBSTER Works, Speech May 7, 1834, vol. ii, p. 254. [P. & M. 1838.]

2. To move around, as in a circle; as, the dog circles the field.

II. i. 1. To move in a circle; move around; revolve.

Thy name shall circle round the gaping throng.
BYRON Childe Harold can. 1, st. 43.

2. [Rare.] To form, or be, or stand in, a circle. [< F. cercler, < LL. circulo, < L. circulus; see CIRCLE, n.] — to circle in, to enclose or confine.

cir'cle, n. 1. Geom. (1) A plane figure bounded by a curved line everywhere equally distant from the center. (2) The circumference of such a figure: the sense usual in higher geometry.

Our life is an apprenticeship to the truth, that around every circle another can be drawn. EMERSON Essays, Circles in first series, p. 239. [H. M. & CO. 1890.]

2. A circular object or arrangement of objects, or that included within it; a circumference; an enclosure; a ring; halo; as, a circle around the moon; a circle of stakes. 3. Loosely, a round or spherical body. 4. An association or fellowship of persons, especially of persons having the same interests or pursuits; a set; coterie; class. 5. A series ending at the starting-point; a repeated succession; hence, a completed series or system; as, the circle of the months; the circle of the sciences, or of the arts.

The hoary Grandsire, who has run life's circle and come back to childhood. HAWTHORNE Mosses p. 251. [H. M. & CO. 1886.]

6. A circular path; course; circuit. 7. An indirect statement; a circumlocution. 8. Logic. A vicious form of argument in which the conclusion is virtually assumed to prove the premise, and then the premise made to prove the conclusion: argument in a circle; a form of petitio principii. 9. In some European and Asiatic countries, an administrative governmental district. 10. An astronomical or other instrument whose important parts are graduated circles. 11. A circus-ring. 12. A special gallery in a theater; as, the dress circle. 13. A diadem; crown. [< F. cercle, < L. circulus, dim. of circus, ring.] Syn.: see CIRCUMFERENCE; CLASS.— ad-den'dum-cir"cle, n. A circle touching the points of the teeth in a gear-wheel: distinguished from pitch-circle.— antarctic c. (Geog.), see ANTARCTIC.— arctic c., see ARCTIC.— argument in a c., see CIRCLE, n., 8.— auxiliary c., the circle described on the major axis of an ellipse as a diameter.— c. about a pair of points, a circle of which the pair are the inverse points.— clr'cle-i"ron, n. The fifth wheel of a vehicle.— c. of altitude, see ALMUCANTAR, 1.— c. of Apollonius (Geom.), a circle that contains all the vertices of triangles on a given base, whose other two sides bear a given constant ratio to each other. — c. of curvature, the osculating circle of a curve at any point.— c. of declination, hour-circles, also vanishing circles; see DECLINATION-CIRCLE.— c. of Haller. 1. The circlet of veins at the base of the nipple of the breast. 2. pl. Small anastomosing arteries arranged in a circle around the optic nerve, upon the sclerous coat of the eye. 3. A fibro-cartilaginous ring at the base of the auriculoventricular valves of the heart.— c. of illumination (Astron.), the great circle dividing the illuminated from the unilluminated hemisphere in a planet or satellite.— c. of latitude. 1. Geog. A parallel of latitude. 2. Astron. A great circle perpendicular to the ecliptic.— c. of longitude, a small circle parallel to the ecliptic.— c. of parade, a circular parry in fencing.— c. of position, in Sumner's method of determining the longitude at sea, a hypothetical circle of the globe, whose center lies immediately under the sun and whose diameter equals the sun's observed zenith distance. The true position of a ship at any time lies upon one of the two points of intersection of two such circles, as determined by two successive observations.— c. of right ascension (Astron.), a great circle drawn through the two celestial poles.— c. of the gorge (Math.), on a surface of revolution, a minimum circle formed by the intersection of a plane perpendicular to the axis.— c. of the sphere, a circle formed by the intersection of a plane with a sphere: called a great circle of the sphere when its plane passes through the center of the sphere, otherwise a small circle of the sphere.— c. of Willis (Anat.), an arterial anastomosis at the base of the brain, between the terminal branches of the carotid and basilar arteries.— c.-tomb, n. A tomb around which a belt of megaliths has been placed.— cosine c. (Math.), the circle on the circumference of which lie the six points of intersection of the sides of a triangle with three lines antiparallel to the sides drawn through the symmedian point.— declination-c., n. Astron. A circle on an equatorial telescope, perpendicular to the equator, that indicates the declination of an object in degrees north or south of the equator.— defensive c. (Pathol.), a condition brought on when a newly acquired disease serves to check the progress of an existing one.— Delezenne's c. (Elec.), an instrument used to demonstrate induction through the agency of the earth. It consists of a circle or ring of metal wound with a coil of insulated wire in circuit with a galvanometer and pivoted in a horizontal position. When it is suddenly turned through any angle in relation to the earth the galvanometer needle is deflected, showing the operation of induction.— dispersion-c., n. Optics. The area of the retina which receives light from a luminous point outside of the eye, but for which the lens is out of focus.— diurnal c., the apparent circle described by a heavenly body in consequence of the rotation of the earth. — divided c., a graduated circle.— Druidical c., a circle of great stones, as those at Stonehenge and Avebury, England, once supposed to have been a Druidical place of worship.— fairy c., a circular growth of fungi in fields, formerly supposed to mark the dancing-places of fairies.— family c., a specified part of a theater, usually the upper balcony, where the seats are comparatively inexpensive.— finding c. 1. In an equatorial telescope, a circle attached to the mounting, and so divided as to indicate at a glance the declination and hour angle to which the telescope is pointing. Compare DECLINATION-CIRCLE. 2. In a transit-instrument, one of several circles on the tube, which read in connection with an attached level, indicate the altitude of the object under observation.— fundamental c. (Math.), a circle which under a Fuchsian or hyperfuchsian transformation returns into itself. fundamental sphere†.— generating c. (Math.), a circle acting as the generatrix of a roulette or glissette.— geodesic c., a curve on a surface, all points of which are at equal distances from a fixed point on the surface, as measured along geodesics.— great c., see CIRCLE OF THE SPHERE.— great c. of Hevellius, a rarely visible halo around the sun, of 90° radius.— great-c. sailing, sailing by the arc of a great circle.— Hart c. (Geom.), in a circular triangle, the circle which touches the inscribed circle and those of the associated triangles.— horary c., hour-c., a circle passing through the north and south poles of the celestial sphere, and conceived to turn with the earth.— law of the c., the law that the product of the distances from a given point to the two intersections of any line from that point with the circumference of any given circle is a constant. See EUCLID III.— Lemoine c., either of two circles discovered by the French geometer Émile Lemoine and called the first and second Lemoine circles. The first is the circumcircle of the Lemoine hexagon; the second is the cosine circle. — meridian-c., n. See MERIDIAN.— Müller's c. (Optics), a circle which passes through the fixation-point and the optical centers of both eyes, and which lies in the plane of regard when the eyes are in the primary position of convergence.— mural c., an astronomical instrument for measuring declinations consisting of a telescope and graduated circle attached by an axis to the face of a north-and-south pier so as to turn in the plane of the meridian.— nodal c. (Acoustics), a circular nodal line on a vibrating disk.— optical c., a graduated circle used in illustrating the laws of refraction, measuring angles, etc.— osculating c., a circle tangent to a curve and having the same curvature as the curve at the point of tangency.— polar circles, the arctic and antarctic circles.— root c., the circle defined by the base of the teeth of a spur, worm, or helical gear.— sensation c., an area either upon the skin or the retina within which two separate impressions can not be recognized as distinct. sensory c.†. — small c., see CIRCLE OF THE SPHERE.— stone c. (Archeol.), a circular structure of upright megaliths.— to square the c., see SQUARE, v.— turning c. (Naut.), the circle made by a ship at a prescribed speed with full helm. It is expressed by its diameter.— Ulloa's c. 1. The colored ring of light surrounding the observer's shadow in the specter of the Brocken. See SPECTER. 2. Bouguer's halo: incorrect use. See HALO. — vanishing c., a great circle of the celestial sphere in which several parallel planes meet or seem to meet.— vertical c. 1. A circle for measuring celestial altitudes. 2. A geodetic instrument for measuring angular elevations, consisting of a theodolite with a circle attached to its horizontal axis.— vicious c. 1. A chain of events of such a character that the effects react upon the cause. 2. Surg. The regurgitation of chyme from the intestine back into the stomach, as after gastro-enterostomy. 3. The accelerating effect of one disease upon another when the two are coexistent.— voltaic c., see CIRCUIT, n.— cir'cled, a. Encircled; marked with a circle; circular.— cir'cle-wise, adv. In the form or manner of a circle.— cir'cline, n. A broad sash used as a cassock-girdle; a cincture.— cir'cloid, a. Having the shape of or resembling a circle.— cir'cly, a. [Rare.] Circle-shaped.

cir'cler, 1 sûr'klər; 2 çir'cler, n. 1. One who encircles or goes round. 2†. A cyclic poet.

cir'clet, 1 sûr'klet; 2 çir'clĕt, n. [Rare.] To move in small circles; form circlets.

cir'clet, 1 sûr'klet; 2 çir'clĕt, n. 1. A small ring, especially one used as a personal ornament, as a finger-ring or head-band.

Forms that wear The kingly circlet rise amid the gloom.
BRYANT The Ages st. 12.

2. A disk-shaped body; as, the circlet of the moon. [< F. cerclet, dim. of cercle; see CIRCLE, n.] Syn.: see CIRCUMFERENCE.

Cir'cle-ville, 1 sûr'kl-vil; 2 çir'cl-vĭl, n. A city, county-seat of Pickaway county, O.

cir'co-cele, 1 sûr'ko-sil; 2 çir'co-çĕl, n. Same as CIRSOCELE.

cir"co-va'ri-an, 1 sûr"ko-vē'ri-ən; 2 çir"co-vā'ri-an, a. Situated around an ovary, as ossicles in certain crinoids. [< L. circus, circle, + OVARIUM.]

cir'cuit, 1 sûr'kit; 2 çir'cĭt, v. [Rare.] I. t. To pass or travel round; move around in. II. i. To move in a circuit; circulate.

cir'cuit, n. 1. A passing or traveling round; a revolution; specif., a journey from place to place, as by a judge or clergyman, in the discharge of duties. 2. A district or route within certain limits or boundaries; especially: (1) A division assigned to a peripatetic judge for the holding of courts at stated intervals.

In the United States the English circuit system still exist in some states, as in Massachusetts, where the judges sit in succession in the various counties of the state.
Encyc. Brit. 11th ed. vol. vi. p. 388.

(2) In the Methodist Church, and in the Evangelical Association, a district in charge of an itinerant minister. 3. The persons undertaking these peripatetic journeys, as the judges. 4. Distance around; compass; circumference. 5. The entire course traversed by an electric current. It consists usually of a source of electricity, as a battery or dynamo, the conductors for conveying the current, and the devices in which it is utilized, as lamps, motors, bells, etc. When it is complete, so that the current will flow, it is said to be made or closed; when interrupted, so that the current stops, it is broken or open. 6. Same as CIRCUIT COURT. 7. Logic. The extension of a term. 8. [Rare.] An indirect statement; a circumlocution. 9. A circlet; ring. 10. [U. S.] Racing. A series of harness-racing events held at different associated tracks, of which the principal meetings together constitute the grand circuit. 11. Math. A closed curve. [F., < L. circuitus, < circuitus, pp. of circumeo, go around, < circum (see CIRCUM-) + eo, go.] cer'cuit†; cir'cuite†. Syn.: see CIRCUMFERENCE.— call'cir"cuit, n. Teleph. 1. A circuit used for the transmission of signals as differentiated from speech. 2. A circuit between two telephone exchanges for ordering up connections: used exclusively by operators.— cir'cuit-break"er, n. 1. A device for breaking or opening an electric circuit at regular intervals, commonly by the movement of a clock-wheel or the vibration of a spring. 2. A form of automatic switch used in power-plants, which opens a circuit when the current in it attains too high a value; when shut by hand it is kept closed by a latch, which is released by an electro-magnetic device when the current becomes too strong, allowing the switch to be forced open by a spring, thus breaking the circuit.— c.-closer, n. An instrument or device for closing or completing an electric circuit.— c.-key, n. Elec. A lever or key that, unless operated on by pressure, holds a circuit closed. closed-c. key†.— c.-rider, n. A Methodist preacher who rides from station to station on his circuit.— close-coupled c. (Elec.), a compound circuit in which a closed and an open circuit are directly joined.— closed-c. operation (Elec.), a signal system in which the normally closed circuit is opened to give the signal; more reliable than the open circuit, since breaks at any point in the wire are immediately detected, but much less economical, as it continually consumes battery power.— closed magnetic c. (Elec.), a magnetic circuit in which there is no air-gap, the flux having an uninterrupted metallic path.— cog-tooth c. (Auto.), a circuit closed and broken by a cog-tooth set at intervals among other teeth of different metal, the latter failing to influence the circuit.— compound c. (Elec.), a circuit consisting of a closed circuit coupled with an open circuit.— derived c. (Elec.), a circuit which contains no source of electrical energy, but in which currents are produced only by induction.— even c. of a curve (Math.), a circuit that is met an even number of times by a right line.— fantom c. (Elec.), a circuit used in multiplex telegraphy and telephony: established electrically, without the employment of additional wires, over portions of existing circuits.— independent circuits (Math.), circuits of such a nature that continuous deformation will not render them identical. — internal c. (Elec.), the portion of a circuit that is inside a generator.— loose-coupled c. (Elec.), a compound circuit in which a closed and an open circuit are joined inductively. — magnetic c. (Elec.), the total space in which magnetic flux occurs.— open-c. operation (Elec.), a signal system in which signals are given by closing the normally open circuit. See CLOSED-CIRCUIT OPERATION.— reactive c. (Elec.), a circuit in which inductance, or capacity, or both, are partly or wholly responsible for its impedance.— reducible c., in mathematics, a circuit that by continuous change can be reduced to a point.— resonant c. (Elec.), a circuit whose capacity and inductance are so arranged as to respond chiefly to electrical oscillations of a certain frequency.— to make a c., to take a roundabout course; go around.— to ride the c., to ride from place to place, as a judge or an itinerant preacher on his rounds.— voltaic c., see def. 5.— circuital, a. Pertaining to or composed of a circuit or circuits.— cir"cuit-eer', vi. [Rare.] To make or go on a circuit.— cir"cuit-eer', n. One who or that which makes or goes on a circuit; specif., a judge or barrister. cir'cuit-er†.— cir"cu-i'tion, n. [Rare.] A going round; circumlocution.— cir'cuit-or, n. One who goes his rounds; a traveling agent.

a, vibrating armature; b, battery; c, condenser; i, induction-coil.

cir-cu'i-tous, 1 sər-kiū'ı-tus; 2 çir-cū'i-tūs, a. Of the nature of a circuit; indirect; roundabout; as, a circuitous march.

There is some little additional expense . . . in settling debts in this circuitous manner (arbitration of exchange).
MILL Political Economy vol. ii, p. 180. [A. 1869.]

cir-cu'i-ty, 1 sər-kiū'ı-ti; 2 çir-cū'i-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiş, pl.] 1. Movement in a circuit; roundabout procedure. 2. Circular form or movement. 3†. Area; compass.

cir'cu-la-ble, 1 sûr'kiu-lə-bl; 2 çir'cū-la-bl, a. That cir'cu-la-bl†, ∫ may be circulated.

cir'cu-land, 1 sûr'kiu-lənd; 2 cir'cū-länd, n. [Rare.] Something to be circulated.

cir'cu-lant, 1 sûr'kiu-lənt; 2 çir'cū-lant, n. Math. A determinant of which each row is formed from the preceding one by moving each constituent one place to the right, the last one taking the place of the first. [< L. circulan(t-)s, ppr. of circulor; see CIRCULATE, v.] cir'cu-lar, 1 sûr'kiu-lər; 2 çir'cū-lar, a. 1. Forming a circle; bounded by a circle; round; as, a circular shield. 2. Moving or occurring in a circle or round; ending at the point of beginning; constantly repeated in the same or similar order; as, circular motion; a circular argument. 3. Of, pertaining to, or forming part of a circle; as, a circular arc. 4. Intended for public circulation or among certain interested persons; as, a circular note.

God gives every man a circular letter of credit for life, and says . . . take your letter to the Banker and the needed assistance will be given you. H. W. BEECHER Pulpit Pungencies No. cxxiv, p. 85. [CA. & P. 1866.]

5. [Rare.] Marked by a succession or series, as of events or experiences. 6. [Rare.] Treating of a particular cycle of legends or traditions; cyclic: said of poets. 7†. Circuitous; indirect. 8†. Complete or perfect; rounded. [< LL. circularis, < L. circulus; see CIRCLE, n.] cir'cu-lare†; cir'cu-lar-y†; cir-cu-ler†.— circular cubic, a cubic curve passing through the circular points at infinity (see below).— c. inch, the area of a circle having a diameter of one inch.— c. instrument, a circle in which the graduations extend about the entire circumference.— c. line. 1. A straight line pertaining to a circle, as a chord or sine. 2. A straight line passing through one of the circular points, or tangent to the absolute.— c. number, a number the powers of which terminate in the same digit as the root, as 5, whose powers are 25, 125, 625, etc.— c. points at infinity, two imaginary points at infinity through which every circle in a given plane is conceived to pass.— cir'cu-lar-ism, n. The theory that space is circular.— cir'cu-lar-ly, adv.— cir'cu-lar-ness, n.

cir'cu-lar, n. 1. A circular letter or announcement, usually a printed advertisement, for special or general circulation. 2. A sleeveless cloak worn by women.

cir"cu-lar'i-ty, 1 sūr"kiu-lar'i-ti; 2 çir"cū-lăr'i-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiş, pl.] The state of being circular, or of changing or moving in circles; also, that which is circular.

The law of circularity is also a law of conservation.
HUGH MACMILLAN Bible Teachings ch. 16, p. 331. [MACM. 1868.]

cir'cu-lar-ize, 1 sūr'kiu-lər-aiz; 2 çir'cū-lar-ız, vt. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] 1. To make circular. 2. To ply with circulars. cir'cu-lar-iseț.— cir"cu-lar-i-za'[or -sa']-tion, n.— cir'cu-lar-iz"er or -is"er, n.

cir'cu-late, 1 sūr'kiu-lēt; 2 çir'cū-lāt, v. [-LAT'ED; -LAT'ING.] I. t. 1. To cause to pass from one to another, or from place to place; spread abroad; disseminate, as a report.

It has been circulated, I know not with what authenticity, that Johnson considered Dr. Birch as a dull writer.
BOSWELL Johnson p. 41. [W. P. N. 1876.]

2†. To make the circuit of.

II. i. 1. To move by a circuitous course back to the starting-point, as steam through a system of pipes. 2. To pass from one to another; spread abroad or become diffused, as a report or money. 3. Math. To repeat two or more figures unendingly; as, a circulating decimal. [< LL. circulo (L. circulor, form a circle), pp. circulatus, make round, < L. circulus; see CIRCLE, n.] cir'cu-lateț; cir'cu-laft. Syn.: diffuse, disseminate, distribute, give out, publish, tell. Compare synonyms for ANNOUNCE.— Ant.: hush, keep quiet, keep to oneself, suppress, withhold.— Prep.: circulate through or throughout the town; among the people; about the neighborhood; circulated in manuscript; the currency is circulated by traders. — cir'cu-lat"ing-stove", n. A stove having a closed water-jacket communicating with a hot-water boiler.— c.-tube, n. A tube from a highly heated part of a boiler to one less heated, to establish a constant circulation in one direction.

cir'cu-late, n. A circulating decimal. See DECIMAL.

cir"cu-la'tion, 1 sūr"kiu-lē'shən; 2 çir"cū-lā'shon, n. 1. The act of circulating, or the state of being circulated; motion around or through something back to the starting-point; circular or circuitous motion; as, the circulation of steam or hot water through pipes; the circulation of the blood.

Diagram showing the circulation of the blood.

rh, right heart; lh, left heart; a, aorta; cb, capillaries of the body; lc, lung capillaries; pa, pulmonary artery; vc, vena cava; pv, pulmonary vein. Arrows show course of circulation. Dark portion indicates venous blood; light portion, arterial.

In vertebrates the circulatory mechanism consists of a central pump, the heart, with a system of ramifying tubes, the arteries, through which the blood is forced to every tissue. A second system of tubes, the veins, which collects and returns the blood to the heart, is connected with the arteries by a network of fine conduits, the capillaries, so that the blood is always enclosed, never coming into direct contact with the tissue cells. In many invertebrates the blood is poured directly into the tissue spaces from the open terminals of the arteries, to be drawn away by the veins, while in some it merely flows about in the body cavity. In the lower forms of life the circulation of the blood is replaced by the osmotic transmission of nutrient matter directly from cell to cell.

The circulation of the blood through the body takes place as follows: Starting from the left ventricle, the bright red blood is first carried into the aorta and then through its branches to all the organs of the body except the lungs. The oxygen is abstracted in the capillaries of the body and is used for the production of animal warmth, and for other metabolic functions. This process liberates carbon dioxid (CO_2), which is absorbed by the capillary blood. The veins which succeed these capillaries therefore contain dark red blood, poor in oxygen and rich in carbonic acid. This blood is carried to the right auricle through both venæ cavæ, and then past the tricuspid valve to the right ventricle. From here it is propelled, by the closure of the tricuspid and the opening of the pulmonary valves, through the pulmonary artery to the lungs, in whose capillaries oxygen is absorbed and carbonic acid given off, so that the blood again assumes a bright red color. The succeeding course is through the pulmonary veins and left auricle into the left ventricle. From the left ventricle the blood again reaches the aorta to repeat the above course. The course described by the blood in its journey through the body is not a circle, but a figure "8" with its center at the heart. The entire time that it takes for a given blood-cell to complete this circuit is about twenty seconds. REISSIG & JELLIFFE The Standard Family Physician vol. i, p. 65. [F. & W. '07.]

2. Free and continuous passage or transmission from point to point or from person to person; diffusion; dissemination; as, the news had a speedy circulation.

How many ideas must there be in circulation, . . . before ever the materials of such a language as Shakespeare or Bacon or Hooker uses, could exist! H. N. HUDSON Lect. on Shakespeare vol. i, lect. iii, p. 93. [S. 1848.]

3. The extent to which something circulates or is circulated; amount of distribution; number issued.

The circulation of each country paper is about the same.
E. W. HOWE in Century Magazine Sept., 1891, p. 778.

4. A current medium of exchange; the notes, coin, etc., in current use; as, debased circulation. 5. Math. The line-integral round a closed curve of the velocity of a fluid resolved along that curve. 6. Plant Physiol. The streaming of cell protoplasm in different currents through protoplasmic strands which stretch from cell wall to nucleus. Compare ROTATION. 7. Math. In a closed curve, the line-integral of the component velocity of a fluid along the curve. 8†. Old Chem. Distillation over and over again. [F., < L. circulatio(n-), < circulor; see CIRCULATE, v.] — fetal circulation, the circulation of the blood during fetal life in placental mammals. In them the lungs are functionally inactive before birth, and the pulmonary circulation is therefore reduced by leading the blood through two by-passages that close at birth: one from the right to the left side of the heart (the foramen ovale), the other from the pulmonary artery to the aorta (the ductus arteriosus). The placenta being the organ by which oxygen and nutriment are supplied to the fetus, all the blood passes through it, by means of the hypogastric (umbilical) arteries and the umbilical vein.— general c. of the atmosphere. Meteor. 1. The interchange of air between equatorial and polar regions. 2. The system of air-currents involved in this process.— pulmonary c., the passage of the blood from the right side of the heart through the lungs to the left side. lesser c.t.— sinusoidal c., the circulation of blood through expanded spaces lined with endothelium, but having none of the other vascular coats.— systematic c., the passage of the blood from the left side of the heart through the general arterial system to the right side. general c.t.

cir'cu-la"tivș, } ble of or causing circulation; circulating.

cir"cu-la'tion-alț.

cir'cu-la"tor, 1 sūr'kiu-lē'tər or -tor; 2 çir'cū-lā'tor, n. 1. One who or that which circulates; specif., a gossip; scandalmonger; formerly, also, a commercial traveler. 2. A circulating decimal. See DECIMAL. 3†. A traveling mountebank or quack. [L., < circulatus; see CIRCULATE, v.] cir"cu-la-to'ri-ous†, a. Of the nature of a quack who gathers a circle about him on the street.

cir'cu-la-to-ry, 1 sūr'kiu-lə-to-ri; 2 çir'cū-la-to-ry, a. 1. Of or pertaining to circulation; as, the circulatory system. 2. Affecting the organs of circulation; as, a circulatory disorder. 3. Going about; circulating. 4. Same as CIRCULAR, 4. 5†. Pertaining to a mountebank or quack. [< L. circulatorius, of a mountebank, < circulator; see CIRCULATOR.] cir'cu-linet.— circulatory system (Physiol.), the system in the animal economy, made up of the heart, arteries, capillaries, and veins, through which the blood circulates.

cir'cu-la-to-ryț, n. Old Chem. A vessel in which fluids were continuously distilled over and over again.

cir'cu-lus, 1 sūr'kiu-lus; 2 çir'cū-lŭs, n. [-LI, 1 -lai; 2 -lī, pl.] 1. A circle; circular mark or structure. 2. An implement formerly used in glass-making for cutting off the necks of glass articles. 3. In early music, a form of time-signature. 4. Anat. A ring, especially one formed by blood-vessels. 5. Logic. A circle in definition or argument. [L.; see CIRCLE, n.]

cir'cum-, 1 sūr'kum-; 2 çir'cŭm-, prefix. About; around; on all sides; round about; surrounding. [< L. circum-, < circum, around, about, < circus, circle.]

It is used: (I) Adverbially, in the sense of 'about, on all sides.' (a) With verbs; as, circumcompass, circumenclose, etc. (b) With participles; as, circumfixed, circumstationed, etc. (c) With nouns; as, circummigration, circumrevolution, etc. (2) Prepositionally, in the sense of 'around, surrounding,' in adjectives; as, circumarctic, circumcentral, etc.

Circum- is an element in a number of self-explaining compounds, with the general meanings given above, as in the following list:

circumagitate, r.	circumhorizontal	circumrotate
circumagitation	circumloquacious	circumrotation
circumanal	circumlunar	circumrotatory
circumbasal	circummedullary	circumscind
circumcallosal	circummigration	circumscrive
circumcircle	circummigratory	circumsolar
circumclocal	circummundane	circumspheral
circumclude	circumnatant	circumterrestrial
circumclusion	circumnuclear	circumtropical
circumesophagal	circumocular	circumundulate, v.
circumfulgent	circumoral	circumundulation

cir"cum-am'bage, 1 sūr'kum-am'biu-lēt; 2 çir'cŭm-ăm'bāg, n. [Rare.] An indirect or roundabout method.— cir"cum-am'ba-ging.— cir"cum-am-ba'gious, a. Roundabout.

cir"cum-am'bi-ent, 1 sūr'kum-am'bi-ent; 2 çir'cŭm-ăm'bi-ĕnt, a. Extending or going around on all sides; encompassing. [< CIRCUM- + AMBIENT.]

Revealing, what the lightning flash does, only the circumambient darkness. MCCOSH Psychology, Motive Powers p. 34. [S. 1887.]

— cir"cum-am'bi-ence, n. A going around or surrounding.— cir"cum-am'bi-en-cy, n. 1. Circumambience. 2. That which is circumambient; surroundings.

cir"cum-am'bu-late, 1 sūr'kum-am'biu-lēt; 2 çir'cŭm-ăm'bū-lāt, v. [-LAT'ED; -LAT'ING.] I. t. To walk round. II. i. To walk about. [< LL. circumambulatus, pp. of circumambulo, < L. circum, around, + ambulo, walk.]— cir"cum-am"bu-la'tion, n.— cir"cum-am'bu-la"tor, n.— cir"cum-am'bu-la-to-ry, a.

cir"cum-a're-a, 1 sūr'kum-ē'ri-ə; 2 çir'cŭm-ā're-a, n. Math. The area of a circumscribed circle. [C.]

cir"cum-ben'di-bus, 1 sūr'kum-ben'di-bus; 2 çir'cŭm-bĕn'di-bŭs, n. [Humorous.] A roundabout course or method; circuitous motion; circumlocution. [< CIRCUM- + BEND[1], n., treated as Latin.]

cir"cum-bul'bar, 1 sūr'kum-bul'bər; 2 çir'cŭm-bŭl'bar, a. Being or going around the eyeball.

Cir"cum-cel'lion, 1 sūr'kum-sel'yən; 2 çir'cŭm-çĕl'yon, n. Ch. Hist. One of a fanatical party of Donatists (4th and 5th centuries) of northern Africa courting death by deeds of violence; hence, any vagabond monk. [< LL. circumcellio(n-), < L. circum, around, + cella, cell.]

cir"cum-cen'ter, n. Math. The center of a circumscribed circle.— cir"cum-cen'tral, a.

cir'cum-cise, } 1 sūr'kum-saiz; 2 çir'cŭm-çiz, vt.
cir'cum-cizeț, } [-CISED; -CIS'ING.] 1. To perform circumcision upon; hence, sometimes in Scripture, to purify from sin. 2†. To cut round; cut short. [< OF. circonciser, < L. circumcisus, pp. of circumcido, < circum (see CIRCUM) + cædo, cut.]— cir'cum-cis"er, n.

cir"cum-ci'sion, 1 sūr'kum-siz'ən; 2 çir'cŭm-çizh'on, n. 1. (1) The act or custom of cutting off the prepuce of the human male: enjoined upon the Jews by the Mosaic law: also practised as a rite by Mohammedans, by Abyssinian Christians, by most native tribes of East and South Africa, and employed in individual instances, by all civilized peoples, for remedial purposes.

The covenant between Abraham and his invisible Guide had been simple. No condition but isolation and the sign of it, circumcision, had been imposed upon the first Hebrew.
J. R. SEELEY Ecce Homo p. 41. [R. BROS. 1871.]

(2) Rarely, the cutting off of the internal labia of females. 2. Spiritual purification; also, those so purified. 3. The Jews as a circumcised people, as distinguished from other and uncircumcised peoples; also, Jewish Christians who maintained that the Mosaic ritual was of perpetual and universal obligation.

He withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision. Gal. ii. 12.

4. [C-] The festival of the circumcision of Jesus, observed on Jan. 1. [< F. circoncision, < L. circumcisio(n-), < circumcisus; see CIRCUMCISE.] — cir"cum-ci'sion-ist, n. One who advocates circumcision.

cir'cum-cone", 1 sūr'kum-kōn"; 2 çir'cŭm-cōn", n. Math. The surface that is the locus of all tangents through a fixed point to a given sphere or spheroid.

cir"cum-con'ic, n. Math. A circumscribing conic.

cir"cum-cres'cent, 1 sūr'kum-kres'ent; 2 çir'cŭm-crĕs'ĕnt, a. Embryol. Growing around: said of an epiblast that encircles the hypoblast in the process of invagination. [< CIRCUM- + L. cresco, grow.] — cir"cum-cres'cence, n.

cir"cum-cu'bic, n. Math. A circumscribing cubic.

cir"cum-de"nu-da'tion n. Geol. Denudation around a tract so as to leave it elevated: often due to superior hardness of the residuary mass.

cir"cum-duce', 1 sūr'kum-diūs'; 2 çir'cŭm-dūç', vt. [-DUCED'; -DUC'ING.] 1. To declare elapsed, as a legal period. 2. Same as CIRCUMDUCT, 1. [< L. circumduco, lead around, < circum, around, + duco, lead.]

cir"cum-duct', 1 sūr'kum-dukt'; 2 çir'cŭm-dŭct', vt. 1. To lead or move round; especially, to revolve (a line or limb) round an axis so as to describe the surface of a cone. 2. Old Eng. Law. To make null and void; set aside. 3. Scots Law. To close, as a case to further proof. 4. To circumduce. [< L. circumductus, pp. of circumduco; see CIRCUMDUCE.] — cir"cum-duc'tion, n. 1. The rotation of a limb so as to describe a conical surface. 2. [Rare.] A conducting round. 3. Old Eng. Law. A canceling; nullifying.— cir"cum-duc'to-ry, a. Of or pertaining to circumduction.

cir"cum-fer', 1 sūr'kum-fūr'; 2 çir'cŭm-fĕr', vt. To bear or carry round.

cir-cum'fer-ence, 1 sər-kum'fər-ens; 2 çir-cŭm'fer-ĕnç, n. 1. Geom. The boundary-line of a circle, also of any plane figure that is bounded by a curved line. A circumference of a sphere is that of any of its great circles. 2. The border-line or border-region of any space; external boundary.

The opening up of the Erie Railroad stirred the Middle States from center to circumference.
MARTIN W. E. Dodge p. 119. [F. & W. 1890.]

3. The distance around a circular or globular body; loosely, that around any space; circuit; compass; as, a chest-circumference of 40 inches. 4. A circle or that contained in it; space occupied; extent; bound; enclosure; also, any circular object.

The Pyncheon Elm, throughout its great circumference, was all alive and full of the morning sun.
HAWTHORNE House of Seven Gables ch. 19, p. 322. [H. M. & CO.]

5. That which surrounds anything; environment. 6. The surface of a spherical body. [< F. circonférence, < LL. circumferentia, < L. circumfero, ppr. circumferen(t-)s, bear around, < circum (see CIRCUM-) + fero, bear.]

Syn.: circle, circlet, circuit, compass, enclosure, outline, periphery, rim, ring.— cir-cum'fer-ence, vt. To enclose as a circumference.— cir-cum'fer-ent, a. Of, relating to, or forming a circumference; encircling; bordering; bounding. — cir"cum-fer-en'tial, a. 1. Relating to or lying in the circumference; as, circumferential extent; circumferential points. 2. Roundabout; indirect.— cir"cum-fer-en'tial-ly, adv.

cir"cum-fer-en'tor, 1 sūr'kum-fər-en'tər or -ter; 2 çir'-cŭm-fer-ĕn'tor, n. 1. A small graduated wheel turning in a handle, used to measure the tire-length of a wheel. 2. Surv. An instrument for measuring angles, consisting of a horizontal brass bar with vertical end-pieces perforated with sighting-slits, and a graduated horizontal circular dial upon which is centered a magnetic needle.

cir"cum-flect', 1 sūr'kum-flekt'; 2 çir'cŭm-flĕct', vt. 1. To bend round or about. 2. Gram. To affect or mark with the circumflex accent. [< L. circumflecto, < circum, around, + flecto, bend.]

cir"cum-flec'tion, n. See CIRCUMFLEXION.

cir'cum-flex, 1 sūr'kum-fleks; 2 çir'cŭm-flĕks, vt. 1. To utter with a circumflex accent or intonation; mark with the circumflex. 2. To wind around; bend about.

cir'cum-flex, a. 1. Gram. Pronounced with or marking a combined rising and falling tone; marked with the accent called circumflex. 2. Anat. Bent in a curvilinear manner, as several vessels and nerves, and the tensor palati muscle. 3. [Rare.] Winding or moving around; curving or curved. [< L. circumflexus, pp. of circumflecto; see CIRCUMFLECT.]— circumflex inflection, or pitch (Elocution), a vocal cadence.

cir'cum-flex, n. 1. A combination of the acute and the grave tone in the same vowel sound. 2. A mark (^ ~) originally made by joining the written signs for acute (') and grave (`): used (1) to indicate the combination of a rising with a falling tone, (2) to mark a long vowel, and (3) as a diacritical mark in phonetics.

cir"cum-flex'ion, 1 sūr'kum-flek'shən; 2 çir'cŭm-flĕc'shon, n. 1. The act of marking with a circumflex. 2. The act of winding, bending, or curving. cir"cum-flec'tion†.

cir-cum'flu-ence, 1 sər-kum'flu-ens; 2 çir-cŭm'flu-ĕnç, n. A flowing round; a surrounding by or as by waters.

cir-cum'flu-ent, 1 sər-kum'flu-ent; 2 çir-cŭm'flu-ĕnt, a. Flowing round; surrounding.

Whose waves the east and western world divide,
Then gird the globe with one circumfluent tide.
MONTGOMERY Greenland can. 2, st. 3.

cir'cum-flux, 1 sûr'kum-fluks; 2 çir'cŭm-flŭks, n. Elec. The amperes of current flowing through the armature of a dynamo or motor multiplied by the total number of turns it makes in the conductors.

cir"cum-lo-cu'tion, 1 sûr'kum-lo-kiû'shən; 2 çir'cŭm-lo-cû'shon, n. Indirect or roundabout expression; the use of many words where few would suffice; a periphrastic expression; hence, lack of condensation or point in speaking or writing. Applied attributively by Dickens to government officers and offices, on account of their circuitous and tedious methods.

How not to do it was the great study and object of all public departments and professional politicians all around the Circumlocution Office. DICKENS Little Dorrit p. 147. [R. & L. 1886.]

Circumlocution is used especially when direct statement is intentionally avoided, as when a suitable term is not at hand, or when a speaker, from delicacy or with a view to soften the force of a direct expression, avoids the use of a single term. [< L. circumlocutio(n-), < circum, around, + loquor, speak.] SYN.: diffuseness, periphrasis, pleonasm, prolixity, redundance, redundancy, surplusage, tautology, tediousness, verbiage, verbosity, wordiness. Circumlocution and periphrasis are roundabout ways of expressing thought; circumlocution is the more common, periphrasis the more technical word. Constant circumlocution produces an affected and heavy style; occasionally, skilful periphrasis conduces both to beauty and to simplicity. Etymologically, diffuseness is a scattering, both of words and thought; redundancy is an overflow. Prolixity goes into endless petty details, without selection or perspective. Pleonasm is the expression of an idea already plainly implied; tautology is the restatement in other words of an idea already stated, or a useless repetition of a word or words. "I saw it with my eyes" is a pleonasm; "all the members agreed unanimously" is tautology. Verbiage is the use of mere words without thought. Verbosity and wordiness denote an excess of words in proportion to the thought. Tediousness is the sure result of any of these faults of style. — ANT.: brevity, compactness, conciseness, condensation, directness, plainness, succinctness, terseness. — cir"cum-lo-cute', v. [Humorous.] To use circumlocution. — cir"cum-lo-cu'tion-a-ry, a. Of, pertaining to, or given to circumlocution; periphrastic. cir"cum-lo-cu'tion-al†; cir"cum-lo-cu'tion-ous†. — cir"cum-lo-cu'tion-ist, n. One who uses circumlocution. cir"cum-loc'u-to-ry, a. Marked by circumlocution; roundabout.

cir"cum-scis'sile, 1 sûr'kum-sis'il; 2 çir'cŭm-sis'il, a. Bot. Dehiscent, as a capsule, in a transverse circular line, so that the top separates like a lid, as in the common purslane. [< L. circumscissus, pp. of circumscindo, cut around, < circum, around, + scindo, cut.] cir"cum-cis'sile†; cir'-cum-scisst.

cir"cum-scribe', 1 sûr'kum-skraib'; 2 çir'cŭm-scrib', vt. [-SCRIBED'; -SCRIB'ING.] 1. To draw a bounding line round; form the boundary of; hence, to mark out or lay down the limits of, as of an object or subject; define. 2. To confine within bounds; restrict the action of; hem in; confine; restrict.

The exorbitant privileges of the Castilian nobles circumscribed the prerogative of the prince within very narrow limits. W. ROBERTSON Charles the Fifth ed. by Prescott, vol. i, bk. i, p. 462. [L.]

3. Geom. (1) To surround with or as with a figure that, touches at every possible point; as, to circumscribe a triangle with a circle; the circle circumscribes the triangle. (2) To cause to surround a figure thus; as, to circumscribe a circle about a triangle. A polygon circumscribes a curve when all its sides are tangent to the curve; a curve circumscribes a polygon when it passes through all the angles of the polygon. 4. To be a signer of (a round robin). 5†. To write or inscribe round the border of, as a coin. [< L. circumscribo, < circum (see CIRCUM-) + scribo, write.]

SYN.: bound, confine, define, delineate, describe, designate, enclose, fence, limit, mark off, mark out, restrict. See LIMIT. — ANT.: dilate, distend, enlarge, expand, fling wide, leave open, open, throw open. — PREP.: circumscribe by or with a line; circumscribe a circle about a polygon; circumscribe within narrow bounds. — cir"cum-scrib'a-bl(eᴾ, a. That can be circumscribed. cir"cum-scrib'er, n. One who or that which circumscribes; especially, one who signs a round robin.

A government so circumstanced was powerless to do good.
BROUGHAM Life and Times vol. ii, p. 331. [R. 1871.]

2†. To set forth circumstantially; relate with details.

cir'cum-stance, n. 1. Something existing or occurring incidentally to some other fact or event; a related or concomitant act or thing; sometimes, an unimportant concomitant; as, a circumstance attending an execution; a weighty circumstance in evidence. 2. An event, happening, or fact, especially if incidental or subordinate; as, a circumstance in English history. 3. pl. The surrounding facts, means, influences, etc., especially as related to one's support and way of living; environment; as, he is the victim of circumstances; one's circumstances in life: sometimes used in the singular, more especially with reference to state or condition resulting from adventitious surroundings.

Of circumstance—power and pomp—divide souls each from other.
BROWNING Jocoseria, Solomon and Balkis st. 4.

4. That which is unessential or of no account; detail; circumstantiality. 5. [Archaic.] Formal show or display; ceremony; pomp; magnificence. [OF., < L. circumstantia, < circum (see CIRCUM-) + stan(t-)s, ppr. of sto, stand.]

SYN.: accompaniment, concomitant, detail, event, fact, feature, incident, item, occurrence, particular, point, position, situation. An accompaniment is something that unites with the principal matter, though not necessary to it; as, the piano accompaniment to a song; a concomitant goes with a thing in natural connection, but in a subordinate capacity, or perhaps in contrast; as, cheerfulness is a concomitant of virtue. A circumstance is not strictly, nor usually, an occasion, condition, effect, or result. (See these words under CAUSE.) Nor is the circumstance properly an incident. (See under ACCIDENT.) We say, "My decision will depend upon circumstances"— not "upon incidents." That a man wore a blue necktie would not probably be the cause, occasion, condition, or concomitant of his committing murder; but it might be a very important circumstance in identifying him as the murderer. All the circumstances make up the situation. A certain disease is the cause of a man's death; his suffering is an incident; that he is in his own home, that he has good medical attendance, careful nursing, etc., are consolatory circumstances. With the same idea of subordination, we often say, "This is not a circumstance to that." So a person is said to be in easy circumstances. See CASE; EVENT. — PREP.: "mere situation is expressed by 'in the circumstances'; action affected is performed 'under the circumstances.'" [M.]

— not a circumstance to [U. S.], not to be compared in importance with (another act, event, or fact). — under the circumstances, in view of the fact that affairs, means, influences, etc., are such as they now are. — cir'cum-stan-tiv(eᵉ, a. Of or pertaining to circumstance. — cir'cum-stant†. I. a. 1. Standing around; surrounding. 2. Incidental. II. n. A bystander.

SYN.: association, caste, circle, clan, clique, club, company, coterie, grade, order, rank, set. A caste is hereditary; a class may be independent of lineage or descent; membership in a caste is supposed to be for life; membership in a class may be very transient; a religious and ceremonial sacredness attaches to the caste, as not to the class. The rich and the poor form separate classes; yet individuals are constantly passing from each to the other; the classes in a college remain the same, but their membership changes every year. We speak of rank among hereditary nobility or military officers; of various orders of the priesthood; by accommodation, we may refer in a general way to the higher ranks, the lower orders of any society. Grade implies some regular scale of valuation, and some inherent qualities for which a person or thing is placed higher or lower in the scale; as, the coarser and finer grades of wool; a man of an inferior grade. A coterie is a small company of persons of similar tastes, who meet frequently in an informal way, rather for social enjoyment than for any serious purpose. Clique has always an unfavorable meaning. A clique is always fractional, implying some greater gathering of which it is a part; the association breaks up into cliques. Persons unite in a coterie through simple liking for one another; they withdraw into a clique largely through aversion to outsiders. A set, while exclusive, is more extensive than a clique, and chiefly of persons who are united by common social station, etc. Circle is similar in meaning to set, but of wider application; we speak of scientific and religious as well as of social circles. See SORT.— PREP.: a class of merchants; the senior class at (sometimes of) Harvard; the classes in college.

clas'si-a-ry, 1 klas'i-ē-ri; 2 clăs'i-ā-ry, n. Belonging or pertaining to naval vessels, or a fleet of vessels, and all that belongs to them, as well as all of their undertakings.

clas'sic, 1 klas'ik; 2 clăs'ic, a. 1. Belonging to the first class or rank in literature or art; authoritative as a model or exemplar; standard; as, classic authors.

I use the word classic in its own sense of senatorial, academic, and authoritative. RUSKIN Art of Eng. lect. iii, p. 76. [a. A. 1884.]

2. Connected with or made famous by Greek or Latin authors; hence, connected historically with any great authors or events; as, classic lands; classic ground. 3. Conforming to a high ideal; chaste; pure. 4. Classical. [< L. classicus, of the first rank, < classis, class.] SYN.: see PURE.

clas'sic, n. 1. Any book or work of art that may be or is regarded as a standard or a model; especially, any literary or artistic production of Greek or Roman genius.

Key 1: ąisle; aų = out; oil; fū = feud; chin; go; jet; ŋ = sing; so; ship; thin, this; azure; F. boñ, düne; ʜ = loch. †, obsolete; ‡, variant.
Key 2: bo͝ok, bo͞ot; fųll, rųle, cūre, bŭt, bûrn; öll, böy; ȼ = k; ç = s; ğo, ġem; iṅk; ṣ = z; thin, this; F. boñ, düne; ʜ = loch.

A classic is properly a book . . . which can be simple without being vulgar, elevated without being distant, and which is something neither ancient nor modern, always new and incapable of growing old. LOWELL Among my Books, Spenser in second series, p. 126. [ʜ. ᴍ. & co. 1886.]

2. Any author, ancient or modern, whose work is generally accepted as being a standard of excellence: distinguished from romantic.

And so Macaulay dwelt at ease in his pleasant retreat, a classic in his own life-time.
G. O. TREVELYAN Macaulay vol. ii, ch. 14, p. 380. [ʜ. 1877.]

3. One who is familiar with classical literature. 4. pl. Specif., the literature that has descended from the Greeks and Romans, especially as studied in modern colleges.—The Six Classics, see THE FIVE CLASSICS, under FIVE.

The social life of Athens in the classical age was such that only very able men could take any pleasure in it.
JOSEPH COOK Heredity lect. iii, p. 12. [o. & co. 1879.]

2. Having a thorough knowledge of Greek and Latin literature; as, a classical scholar. 3. Adhering to rules and forms of Greek and Roman masterpieces of literature; as, the classical drama; the classical school of literature, as opposed to the romantic. 4. Resembling or modeled after the highest forms of ancient art; as, classical features. 5. Mus. (1) Subordinating idea to form. (2) Composed by the great masters.

It [classical] is used of works which have held their place in general estimation for a considerable time, and of new works . . . of the same type and style. Hence the name has come to be especially applied to works in the forms which were adopted by the great masters of the latter part of the 18th century, as instrumental works in the sonata form, and operas constructed after the received traditions; and in this sense the term was used as the opposite of 'romantic.'
GROVE Dict. of Music and Musicians vol. i, p. 547. [ᴍacᴍ. '08.]

6. Of or pertaining to a class. 7. Eccl. Of or pertaining to a classis. 8. Classic. 9. Relating to or naming the doctrines of Adam Smith and his adherents, Mill, Malthus, etc., who used, in general, the deductive method; as, the classical economists as distinguished from the historical economists. clay[1], n. 1. A common earth of various colors, compact and brittle when dry, but plastic and tenacious when wet. It is a hydrous aluminum silicate, generally mixed with powdered felspar, quartz, sand, iron oxids, and various other minerals, and is formed from the decomposition of aluminous rocks, chiefly from felspar in granite.— Arca clay (Geol.), a Pleistocene, marine deposit of Scandinavia and Finland, corresponding to part of the submergence that followed the maximum extension of glaciation, and characterized by shells of the genus Arca. A number of grades of clay are named from their suitableness to a particular use; as, brick-clay (containing a little iron), fire-c. or fire-brick c. (containing nothing fusible), kaolin c., porcelain c. (very pure and a source of metal aluminum), potter's c., etc. Certain clay deposits take their names from places in the vicinity; as, Atherfield clay, Bradford c., Erie c., Kimmeridge c., Raritan c., etc. See GEOLOGY. 2. Earth in general, especially mud or moist earth; hence, the human body, or humanity considered as earthy and mortal; especially, a dead body.

'She is dead!' they said to him; 'come away:
Kiss her and leave her,— thy love is clay!'
EDWIN ARNOLD He and She st. 1.

[< AS. clæg; cp. CLEAVE[2], v., CLEW.] clalet; clayet.— abyssal or abyssal clay, same as RED CLAY.— astringent c., a clay in which alum is to be found, and under which there usually is an abundance of water.— cardium c., Pleistocene deposits occurring in Scandinavia in which cockle fossils of the Cardiidæ have been found.— clay's band", n. Mining. Clay ironstone or iron ore, particularly when laminated.— c.-bank, n. 1. A bank or deposit of clay. 2. A dull tawny color. 3. [Dial., So. U. S.] A yellowish horse. — c.-bar, n. Mining. A bar for forcing clay into, and plastering the sides of, a blast-hole. clay'er†; clay'ing-bar"‡. — c.-head, n. A whorl or disk of baked clay found in prehistoric tombs, barrows, or mounds.— c.-brained, a. Dull; stupid; doltish.— c.-burning, n. [Gt. Brit.] Agric. A process of turning over and then burning the soil for the purpose of rendering it more fertile.— c.-cold, a. Cold as clay; clammy.— c.-course, n. Mining. A gouge or layer of clay alongside a vein of ore.—c.-dikes, n. [Scot.] · Mining. A band consisting of gravel, sand, and clay running through coal deposits, so called from its originally having formed the bed of a stream.— c.-dog, n. Same as CLAY-STONE.— c.-eater, n. A person addicted to chewing or eating a fatty clay: a practise common in many parts of the world.— c. fever (Vet.), the disease of scratches in horses.— c.-hole, n. Geol. An oval cavity in sedimentary rocks (as in sandstones), filled with fine clay or mud.— c. iron ore, or c. ironstone, iron ore, as the oxid or carbonate, mixed with clay.— c.-mill, n. A mill for preparing clay.— c.-pan, n. A clayey hollow on the surface of the ground, which retains rain-water.— c.-pit, n. A pit or deposit from which clay is dug. — c.-press, n. Ceram. A press, operated by a screw and formed of a series of plates between which bags containing clay are placed, the excess of moisture in the clay being removed by the action of the screw.— c.-slate, n. A variety of slate that splits readily into thin sheets suitable for roofing and other purposes.— c.-stone, n. Geol. 1. One of the concretionary nodules, spheroidal, discoid, or of fantastic shape, frequently found in alluvial clay. 2†. [Eng.] An igneous rock composed of compact felspar.— c.-sugar, n. Sugar treated with clay in the process of refining.— c.-surface process (Phot.), a method of making line-printing blocks.— fatty c., any unctuous clay, as bole.— flint c., a fire-clay of flinty consistency.— joint c., a calcareous clay which tends to break up into small cubical blocks.— Mytilus c. (Geol.), a marine Pleistocene formation of the Baltic basin that was deposited on the Arca clay.— red c., exceedingly fine red, sometimes gray, or chocolate clay occurring in the oceans from a depth of 2,000 fathoms to the bottoms of the deepest abysses and resulting from the decomposition of volcanic dust that has settled to the ocean bottom. It may contain the remains of Foraminifera and Radiolaria.— slip c., clay which is easily fusible and forms a natural glaze when applied to stoneware and burned at a proper temperature.— Yoldia c., a marine, shallow-water, Pleistocene deposit of the Baltic basin laid down during a submergence that followed the maximum extension of glaciation and containing abundant shells of the genus Yoldia. Overlain by the Arca clay.— clay'en, a. [Archaic or Obs.] Of clay.— clay'ey, a. Of, abounding in, or mixed with clay; resembling or smeared with clay: used also figuratively.

SYN.: able, adroit, apt, bright, dexterous, expert, gifted, happy, ingenious, keen, knowing, quick, quick-witted, sharp, skilful, smart, talented. Clever, as used in England, especially implies an aptitude for study or learning, and for excellent tho not preeminent mental achievement. The early New England usage as implying simple and weak good nature has largely affected the use of the word throughout the United States, where it has never been much in favor. Smart, indicating dashing ability, is now coming to have a suggestion of unscrupulousness, similar to that of the word sharp, which makes its use a doubtful compliment. The discriminating use of such words as able, gifted, talented, etc., is greatly preferable to an excessive use of the word clever. Compare synonyms for ABILITY; ACUMEN; ASTUTE. — Ant.: awkward, bungling, clumsy, dull, ignorant, senseless, slow, stupid, thick-headed. — clev'er-ish, a. Somewhat clever. — clev'er-ish-ly, adv. — clev'er-ism, n. [Rare.] A clever notion or saying. cli-nid'i-um, 1 kli-nid'i-um; 2 cli-nĭd'i-ŭm, n. [-I-A, pl.] Bot. In lichens, a filament in a clinosporangium from which clinospores are abjointed. [< Gr. klinō, incline.]

clin'i-um, 1 klin'i-um; 2 clin'i-ŭm, n. [-I-A, pl.] Bot. A receptacle: used chiefly in compounds derived from Greek; as, per*iclinium,* an involucre around the receptacle. [< Gr. klinō, bend.]

clink, 1 klink; 2 clink, v. I. t. 1. To cause to make a short, sharp, slight ringing sound, the result of impact; chink; as, to clink coin, glasses, etc. 2. To strike smartly. 3. [Scot. & North. Eng.] To clench, snatch, or seize; weld. II. i. 1. To make the sound defined above. 2. [Rare.] To rime or jingle. [Imitative nasalized form of CLICK[1].] clinket.

clink[1], n. 1. A sharp, short, slight ringing sound, as of glass or small metallic bodies in collision.

The south wind blew the sound of hoof and wheel,

MORRIS Earthly Paradise, Love of Alcestis l. 160.

2. [Scot., & Dial., Eng.] A smart blow; "clip." 3. [Scot.] (1) Money; chink. (2) A telltale. 4. [Slang, Eng.] A prison. 5. pl. [Prov. Eng.] Long iron nails. 6†. A latch; keyhole.

clink[2], n. [Eng.] An inferior grade of small beer drunk chiefly by harvest laborers.

clink'ant, a. Same as CLINQUANT.

clink'er, 1 klink'ər; 2 clink'er, rt. & ri. To form or cause to form a clinker; become clogged with clinker.

clink'er[1], n. A thing that clinks. Specif.: (1) An irregular mass of incombustible partly melted matter left by coal in burning. (2) One of the large irregular porous fragments of lava, resembling furnace-clinkers, ejected from volcanoes. (3) A brick impregnated with niter and burned very hard: used especially for floors and pavements. (4) A vitrified or overburned brick, giving a clinking or glassy sound when struck; an adherent mass of bricks fused by excessive heat. (5) A metal-heeled shoe used in some stage-dances, as jigs. [C.] (6) [Rare.] A scale of black oxid formed on red-hot iron. (7) A red iron oxid used to polish steel. [< D. klinkaerd, < klinken, ring. In its general sense < CLINK, v.] — clink'er-bar", n. A bar across the ash-pit of a furnace to support the slicing-tool.— c.-door, n. An ash-pit door.— sterile c., a layer of porous purified cinders used to absorb organic matter from sewage, in sewage-disposal plants.

clink'er[2], n. A clencher.— clink'er-built", a. Naut. Built with planks (or rarely metal plates) having the edges overlapping and riveted together. When the plates of an iron vessel overlap, it is usually said to be lap-jointed.— c.-work, n. Lap-jointed work: applied to planking.

clink'erd, pp. Clinkered. S. S.

clink'stone", 1 kliŋk'stōn"; 2 cliŋk'stōn", n. Petrol. A compact grayish rock, clinking like metal when struck; phonolite.

clinkt, pp. Clinked. S. S.

clink'um-bell", 1 kliŋk'um-bel"; 2 cliŋk'ŭm-bĕl", n. [Scot.] A bellman.

clink'um-clank"um, 1 kliŋk'um-klaŋk'um; 2 cliŋk'ŭm-claŋk'ŭm, n. A succession or alternation of clinking sounds; hence, any meaningless babel, or idle jangle of words. [Reduplication of CLINK‡.] clink'-clank"‡; clink'um-clank"‡.

cli'no-, 1 klai'no-; 2 cli'no-. From Greek klinō, bend or slope: a combining form.— cli"no-an"e-mom'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring the horizontal and vertical movements of the wind.— cli"no-ax'is, n. A clinodiagonal.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

cli"no-ceph'a-ly, 1 klai'no-sef'ə-li; 2 cli"no-çĕf'a-ly, n. Craniol. A common form of slight distortion of the cranium, in which it is flattened or slightly hollowed at the vertex. [< CLINO- + Gr. kephalē, head.] cli"no-ceph'a-lism‡.— cli"no-ce-phal'ic, a. Affected with clinocephaly. cli"no-ceph'a-lous‡.— cli"no-ceph'a-lus, n. [-LI, 1 -lai; 2 -li, pl.] A clinocephalic individual.

cli'no-chlore, n. Mineral. A hydrous magnesium aluminum silicate ($H_8Mg_5Al_2Si_3O_{18}$), transparent to translucent, greenish, and crystallizing in the monoclinic system. [< CLINO-; and see CHLOR-.] — cli"no-cla'site, n. Mineral. A hydrous copper arsenate, $Cu_2As_2O_8.3Cu(OH)$, dark-green, found crystallized or massive. cli'no-clase‡.— cli"no-cro'cite, n. Mineral. A yellow decomposition product that is closely related to clinophæite. — cli"no-dac'ty-ly, n. A malformation of the hand in which the fingers are bent out of position.

cli'node, 1 klai'nōd; 2 cli'nōd, n. Bot. A receptacle that bears clinidia in certain fungi. [< CLINO- + Gr. eidos; see -OID.]

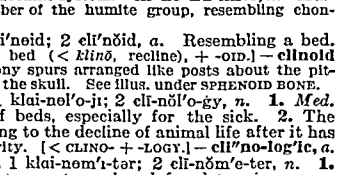
cli"no-di-ag'o-nal, n. Crystal. The inclined lateral axis in monoclinic crystals.— cli'no-dome, n. Crystal. The dome in monoclinic crystals parallel to the clinoaxis.— cli"no-do-mat'ic, a.— cli'no-graph, n. 1. An instrument used for measuring the variation from the perpendicular of a shaft or well. 2. A hinged drafting-instrument with two straight edges which is like a set square, but is capable of being adjusted in any desired angle: used in drawing several successively similar angles.— cli"no-graph'ic, a. So arranged (as a drawing) that the light falls obliquely to the plane of projection.— cli"no-he'dral, a. Crystallog. Characterized by a single plane of symmetry parallel to the clinopinacoid and no axis of symmetry.— clinohedral group, a subdivision of the monoclinic system, and one of the thirty-two groups into which crystals are divided on the basis of symmetry.— cli"no-he'drite, n. Mineral. A white zinc-calcium silicate ($H(ZnOH)CaSiO_4$) that crystallizes in the monoclinic system.— cli"no-hu'mite, n. Mineral. A member of the humite group, resembling chondrodite.

cli'noid, 1 klai'noid; 2 cli'nŏid, a. Resembling a bed. [< Gr. klinē, bed (< klinō, recline), + -OID.] — clinoid processes, bony spurs arranged like posts about the pituitary fossa of the skull. See illus. under SPHENOID BONE.

cli-nol'o-gy, 1 klai-nel'o-ji; 2 cli-nŏl'o-gy, n. 1. Med. The study of beds, especially for the sick. 2. The science relating to the decline of animal life after it has reached maturity. [< CLINO- + -LOGY.] — cli"no-log'ic, a.

cli-nom'e-ter, 1 klai-nem'ı-tər; 2 cli-nŏm'e-ter, n. 1. Geol. An instrument employed for determining the dip of rock-strata, or the slope of an embankment or hillside, generally by means of a pendulum moving over a graduated arc. 2. Mech. Any device for determining inclination or angular elevation or depression, as of a gun, the deck of a rolling ship, the human profile, etc. 3. An apparatus by which the inclination of the vertical meridians of the cornea is measured. cli'no-scope‡. [< CLINO- + -METER.] — clinometer heel, a ship's heel as registered by the clinometer.— c. level, a hand-level with graduated arc, showing angles of elevation or depression.— cli"no-met'ric, a. 1. Pertaining to or measured by the clinometer. 2. Pertaining to oblique crystalline forms or to their measurement. cli"no-met'ri-cal‡.— cli-nom'e-try, n. Geol. The art or operation of measuring the dip of strata.



Clinometer.
s, sights; l, levels; a, sliding scale; c, compass for taking bearings of objects.

cli'no-mor"phy, 1 klai'no-mōr'fi; 2 cli'no-môr'fy, n. Bot. Any of various differences of form of leaves or other organs arising through the oblique or horizontal position of the axis that bears them.

clin"o-plin'ite, n. Mineral. A vitreous dark-green hydrated potassium-aluminum and iron sulfate, $(K,Na)_4Al_2(FeO)_3(SO_4)_4.8H_2O$, that crystallizes in the monoclinic system.— cli"no-pin'a-coid, n. Crystal. The plane in monoclinic crystals parallel to the vertical and inclined axes.— cli"no-pin"a-coi'dal, a.— Cli"no-po'di-um, n. Bot. A genus of temperate-zone herbs or subshrubs of the family Menthaceæ. They have showy flowers with the calyx two-lipped. Calamints, balms, and basils are included among the species.— cli'no-prism, n. Crystal. A prism, in monoclinic crystals, whose intercept on the clinoaxis is greater than unity.— cli"no-pyr'a-mid, n. Crystal. A pyramid, in monoclinic crystals, whose intercept on the clinoaxis is greater than unity.— cli"no-rhom'bic, a. Crystal. Monoclinic; monosymmetric.— cli"no-rhom'bold, a. Same as TRICLINIC. cli"no-rhom-bol'dal‡.— cli'no-scope, n. A clinometer. — cli"no-spo-ran'gi-um, n. [-GI-A, pl.] Bot. In lichens, a minute conceptacle in which clinospores are abjointed from clinidia, occurring usually in the lower forms. cli"no-pyc-nid'i-um‡.— cli'no-spore, n. Bot. A spore abjointed from a clinidium in a clinosporangium; a stylospore.— cli'no-stat, n. An apparatus employed in experimental plant-physiology, for counteracting and eliminating the influence of such agents as light, gravity, etc. It is of clockwork, carrying a revolving disk on which growing plants are placed.— cli"no-trop'ic, a. Bot. Having the median plane oblique to the horizon: said of certain plant-leaves which are not symmetrically placed with reference to the environment.— cli"no-zois'ite, n. Mineral. A rose-red variety of epidote ($Ca_2Al_2(AlOH)(SiO_4)_3$) that is nearly related to zoisite in composition, and crystallizes in the monoclinic system.

clin'quant, 1 kliŋ'kənt; 2 cliŋ'kant. [F.] I. a. Glittering as with gold or silver; spangled; tinseled. II. n. Imitation gold-leaf; Dutch gold; hence, meretricious ornament.

clint, 1 klint; 2 clint, vt. [Dial. or Obs.] To clinch; complete.

clint, n. 1. A flinty rock; a hard projecting rock or crag. 2. [Scot.] A rough stone used in curling. [< Ice. klettr.] — clint'y, a. Rocky.

clint'ing, 1 klint'ıŋ; 2 clint'ing, n. [Rare.] A tinkling.

Clin'ton[1], 1 klin'tən; 2 clin'ton, n. Geol. A formation of the Niagaran series of the Silurian system of rocks in the northern Appalachians: so called from Clinton, Oneida county, N. Y.

Clin'ton[2], n. 1. De Witt (2/21 1769–2/11 1828), an American lawyer and statesman; mayor of New York; son of James. 2. George (1/22 1739–4/28 1812), an American lawyer and statesman; brother of James; 4th Vice-President of the United States. 3. James (8/9 1736–12/22 1812), an American general. 6. A county in S. Illinois; 498 sq. m.; county-seat, Carlyle. 7. A county in N. W. central Indiana; 402 sq. m.; county-seat, Frankfort. 8. A county in E. central Iowa; 680 sq. m. 9. A county in S. E. Kentucky; 224 sq. m.; county-seat, Albany. 10. A county in central Michigan; 570 sq. m.; county-seat, St. Johns. 11. A county in N. W. Missouri; 417 sq. m.; county-seat, Plattsburg. 12. A county in N. E. New York; 1,041 sq. m.; county-seat, Plattsburg. 13. A county in S. W. Ohio; 424 sq. m.; county-seat, Wilmington. 14. A county in N. central Pennsylvania; 892 sq. m.; county-seat, Lock Haven. 15. A city, county-seat of Clinton county, Ia. 16. A town in Worcester county, Mass. 17. A city, county-seat of Henry county, Mo. 18. A city, county-seat of De Witt county, Ill. 19. A city, county-seat of Hickman county, Ky. 20. A town, county-seat of East Feliciana parish, La. 21. A town, county-seat of Sampson county, N. C. 22. A town, county-seat of Anderson county, Tenn. 23. A city in Vermilion county, Ind. 24. A village in Lenawee county, Mich. 25. A town in Rock county, Wis. 26. A town in Middlesex county, Conn. 27. A village in Oneida county, N. Y.; seat of Hamilton College (non-sectarian), founded in 1812. 28. A town in Laurens county, S. C. 29. A village in Huron county, Ontario, Canada. 30. A town in Hinds county, Miss.; seat of Mississippi College (Baptist), founded in 1826.

Clin'ton, Mount. 1. One of the Adirondacks, Essex county, N. Y.; 4,937 ft. high. 2. One of the White Mountains, New Hampshire; 4,320 ft. high.

Clin-to'ni-a, 1 klin-tō'ni-ə; 2 clin-tō'ni-a, n. Bot. 1. A small genus of perennial herbs of the family Convallariaceæ, with short, creeping rootstock, 2 to 4 oblong, broadly lanceolate, radical leaves, and a naked scape, bearing usually an umbel of flowers succeeded by berries. Two species, C. borealis and C. umbellata, with blue and black berries respectively, are common in the cool woods and mountains of the eastern United States. 2. [c-] Any plant of this genus. [< De Witt Clinton, Am. statesman.]

clin'ton-ite, 1 klin'tən-ait; 2 clin'ton-it, n. Same as SEYBERTITE. [< De Witt Clinton.]

cli-nure', 1 kli-niūr'; 2 cli-nūr', n. Angular position in space, as of a line or vector; inclination: term invented by Prof. James Thomson. [< Gr. klinō, bend or slope.]

Cli'nus, 1 klai'nəs; 2 cli'nŭs, n. Ich. A genus typical of Clinidæ. [< Gr. klinō, bend.]

Cli'o[1], 1 klai'o; 2 cli'o, n. 1. Class. Myth. The Muse of epic poetry and history. 2. Conch. A genus typical of Cliidæ. [L., < Gr. Kleiō, < kleiō, celebrate.]

Cli'o[2], n. A name formed from four letters signed consecutively by Addison to contributions to the Spectator, the initials of Chelsea, London, Islington, and the Office whence they were sent.

Cli-on'i-dæ, 1 klai-on'i-di; 2 cli-ŏn'i-dē, n. pl. Spong. A family of Thalassospongiæ, especially those without microscleres and choanæ: including the boring sponges. Cli-o'na, n. (t. g.) [< CLIO[1], 2.] — cli'o-nid[1], a. & n.— cli'o-noid[1], a.

Cli-on'i-dæ[2], n. pl. Conch. A family of gymnosomatous pteropods, especially those without gills and with two or three pairs of buccal appendages, but no jaws. Cli'o-ne, n. (t. g.) [< CLIO[1], 1.] Cli-o'ne-a‡; Cli'o-nes‡.— cli'o-nid[2], n.— cli'o-noid[2], a.

Cli"o-nop'si-dæ, 1 klai'o-nep'si-di; 2 cli'o-nŏp'si-dē, n. pl. A family of pteropods with a barrel-shaped body and very long proboscis. Cli"o-nop'sis, n. (t. g.) [< CLIONE + Gr. ops, face.] — cli"o-nop'sid, a. & n.

clip[1], 1 klip; 2 clip, vt. [CLIPPED or CLIPT; CLIP'PING.] 1. To cut with shears or scissors; shear straight or even; trim with scissors; shear, as sheep; as, to clip wool. 2. To snip a part from; especially, to pare the edge of (a coin) fraudulently; curtail; cut short; especially, to omit syllables of (words); articulate imperfectly, as in hurried utterance.

Clipt money may be accounted good, if compared to counterfeit.
R. SOUTH Sermons vol. ii, p. 370. [D. & M. 1870.]

The Americans' . . . idioms are compressed; even their spelling is clipped. Edinburgh Review Jan., 1891, p. 33.

[< Ice. klippa, clip, shear hair, orig. ' draw tightly together.'] clippet‡.— to clip the wings of, to cut the wing-feathers of to prevent flight; figuratively, to check the aspiration or ambition of; disable.

clip[2], vt. [CLIPPED or CLIPT; CLIP'PING.] 1. To clasp as in an embrace; grip; clutch. 2. To surround closely; encircle; hold tightly. [< AS. clyppan, clasp.]

clip[3], vi. [CLIPPED or CLIPT; CLIP'PING.] 1. [Colloq.] To run or move swiftly; speed; fly.

MRS. BURTON HARRISON Bar Harbor Days p. 128. [n. 1887.]

2. [Archaic.] To move the wings quickly, as in rapid flight.

clip[1], n. 1. That which is clipped off; specifically, the wool-product of one shearing or season. 2. The act of clipping. 3. pl. Shears. 4. [Colloq.] A blow with the hand or fist; a swinging or glancing hit.

clip[2], n. 1. An appliance that clasps, grips, or holds fast. Specifically: (1) Any one of several clasping, gripping, or lifting devices in machinery. (2) A flange on a horseshoe, projecting upward above the toe-calk. (3) A band of metal around the end of a swingletree, to which the trace is attached, or around a carriage-shaft or -axle. (4) A gaff. (5) Building. (a) A lead strip used in roofing for holding tiles or slates in position. (b) A device used in structural steelwork to attach angle and tee irons to beams without the use of bolts. (6) [Gt. Brit.] Ordnance. An appliance for hoisting heavy shells. (7) A cartridge-holder for loading small arms.

2. A spring clasp for holding letters, business-cards, etc. 3. A pinching device for stopping the flow of a fluid in a flexible tube. 4. Surg. An appliance for stopping the bleeding of arteries, etc. 5. Croquet & Rogue. A colored marker fixed to a hoop to show that it is the next in order for a ball of the same color to pass through. 6†. An embrace; a clasp.— clip'-chair", n. A railway-chair sometimes used to fasten rails to iron sleepers. — c.-forceps, n. Surg. A forceps with broad-ended blades used in occluding an artery.— c.-gear, n. Mech. A gear that operates as a catch.— c.-hook, n. A sister-hook.— c.-kingbolt, n. A kingbolt fitted with a U-shaped iron band by which it is attached to the axle-bed, the ends of the band being rounded and threaded to receive nuts.— c.-nut, n. Same as CLASP-NUT.— c.-plate, n. An axle-band.— c.-pulley, n. A pulley arranged with automatic levers for gripping and preventing the slip of a wire rope passing over it.— c.-rod, n. Mech. A rod having one or more projecting pieces which serve to engage some part of the machinery with which the rod is associated.— c.-yoke, n. A metal plate or bar having a hole at each end, through which pass the threaded ends of a U-shaped clip.

clip[3], n. [Slang, U. S.] Rate of speed, especially in trotting; a fast gait. [< CLIP[3], v., ult. the same as CLIP[1], v. Cp. LG. kleppen, run fast.]

clip'fish', 1 klip'fish"; 2 clip'fish", n. A cod, or other fish, split, salted, and dried. [< Norw. klipfisk, < klippe, rock, + fisk, fish. klip'fish"‡.

clip'per, 1 klip'er; 2 clip'er, n. 1. One who or that which clips. Specifically: (1) One who clips coin. (2) An instrument for clipping hair, especially of horses. (3) pl. Shears; especially, pruning-shears or sheep-shears. (4) Mech. A metal-shearing machine; as, a bolt-clipper. 2. A sailing vessel built for speed, with fine lines; as, a Baltimore clipper. 3. [Colloq.] One who or that which moves swiftly, as a swift horse or a smart person. 4. An Australian warbler (genus Ephthianura). 5. The larva of a neuropterous insect (genus Sialis), used for fish-bait. [< CLIP[1], v.; but cp. LG. klepper, fast horse.]— clip'per-bow", n. Naut. A wedge-like overhanging bow with a hollowed and curved or flat entrance, as distinguished from one with straight stem.— c.-built, a. Naut. Built like a clipper.

clip'per-clap"per, 1 klip'er-klap"er; 2 clip'er-clăp'er, a. Going fast like a clapper, as a chattering tongue.

clip'ping, n. 1. The act of clipping; specifically, the crime of clipping coin. 2. That which is cut off or out by clipping; as, newspaper clippings.— clip'ping-machine", n. A bolt-clipper.

clip'some, 1 klip'səm; 2 clip'som, a. [Rare.] Fit to be embraced. [a clique.

clique, 1 klik; 2 clik, vt. & vi. [Colloq.] To unite in or form clique, n. [F.] 1. A small exclusive party or set associated for a common purpose, usually a selfish or unworthy one, as in politics or in arrogantly deciding the fashion or standard of taste in social matters or literature; a coterie. 2. Cliquishness. click†. Syn.: see CLASS.— cliqu'ish, a. Inclined to form cliques; savoring of a clique; exclusive. clique'y‡; cliqu'y‡.— cliqu'ish-ly, adv.— cliqu'ism, n. Clannish spirit; exclusiveness. cliquc'ism‡; cliqu'er-y‡; cliqu'ish-ness‡.

clis"e-om'e-ter, 1 klis'ı-em'e-tər; 2 clis'e-ŏm'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring the angle between the axis of the pelvis and the spinal column. [< Gr. klisis, inclination (< klinō, incline), + metron, measure.]

clish'-clash", 1 klish'-klash"; 2 clish'-clăsh". I. n. [Scot.] 1. Foolish talk; gossip. clish'ma-clash"‡; clish'ma-clav"er‡. 2†. The reciprocal clash of weapons. II. adv. With a clashing sound.

Clis"i-o-cam'pa, 1 klis'ı-o-kam'pə; 2 clis'i-o-căm'pa, n. Same as TENT-CATERPILLAR.

Clis"i-o-phyl'lum, 1 klis'ı-o-fil'əm; 2 clis'i-o-fĭl'ŭm, n. A Paleozoic genus of cyathophylloid corals. [< Gr. klisis, inclination, + phyllon, leaf.] — clis"i-o-phyl'lid, a. & n.

Clis"o-spi'ra, 1 klis'o-spai'rə; 2 clis'o-spi'ra, n. A genus of fossil turbinate gastropods of the family Xenophoridæ, found in Silurian rocks. [< Gr. klisis, inclination, + petra, spire.]

Clis'sa, 1 klis'ə; 2 clis'a, n. A town in Dalmatia; many times besieged; near the reputed site of the Roman castle of Andretium.

Clis"son', 1 kli"sōn'; 2 cli"sŏn', Olivier de (1332?–1407). A French soldier; Constable of France.

Clis-ten"ter-a'ta, 1 klis-ten'tər-ē'tə; 2 clis-tĕn'ter-ā'ta, n. pl. Conch. The Arthropomata. [< CLISTO- (see CLEISTO-), + Gr. enteron, entrails, < en, in.] — clis-ten'ter-ate, a. & n.

Clis'the-nes, 1 klis'thı-nēz; 2 clis'the-nēz, n. An Athenian statesman of the 6th century B. C.; grandfather of Pericles.

clis'to-carp, etc. See CLEISTO-. [n. Same as CLISTOCARP.

clis"to-the'ci-um, 1 klis'to-thi'shi-əm; 2 clis'to-thē'shi-ŭm, n.

clit, a. [Prov. Eng.] Stiff or heavy, as clay or dough.

Cli-tam"bo-ni'tes, 1 kli-tam'bo-nai'tiz; 2 cli-tăm'bo-nī'tēz, n. A genus of brachiopods occurring in Ordovician rocks of Europe and North America. [< Gr. klitys, slope, + ambōn, ridge.]

clitch, 1 klich; 2 clich, vt. & vi. [Dial. or Obs.] 1. To clutch. 2. To gum or stick together.— clitch'y, a. Sticky.

clite, 1 klait; 2 clit, n. [Prov. Eng.] 1. Goose-grass, or cleavers. 2†. Burdock. cli'therst; cli'verst.

cli"tel-lif'er-ous, 1 klai"te-lif'er-əs; 2 cli"tĕ-lĭf'er-ŭs, a. Having or bearing a clitellum. [< CLITELLUM + L. fero, bear.]

cli-tel'lum, 1 kli-tel'əm; 2 cli-tĕl'ŭm, n. [-LA, pl.] Helminth. A thickened band around certain segments of the body of an annelid, as an earthworm, formed by the development of epidermal layers consisting of glandular cells, the secretion of which serves to form the cocoon for the eggs, or to attach individuals during copulation. [< L. clitellæ, pl., pack-saddle.] cli-tel'lus‡.— cli-tel'lar, a.

INTERNATIONAL CLOUD CLASSIFICATION.
WITH ABBREVIATIONS AND POPULAR EQUIVALENTS.

Upper clouds—

1. Cirrus (ci.) Detached clouds, delicate and fibrous, taking the form of feathers. "Mares' tails"; when in long converging bands, "polar bands" or "Noah's ark," which blend into

2. Cirro-stratus (ci.st.) A thin, whitish, often web-like sheet. "Sheet-cloud."

3. Cirro-cumulus (ci.cu.) Small globular masses or white flakes. "Mackerel sky."

4. Alto-cumulus (a.cu.) Large globular masses, white or grayish, partially shaded. "Flock-clouds" (Ger. "Schäfchen").

5. Alto-stratus (a.st.) A thick sheet of a gray or bluish color, often causing solar and lunar coronæ.

6. Strato-cumulus (s.cu.) Large globular masses or rolls of dark cloud, frequently covering the whole sky.

7. Nimbus (nb.) A thick layer of dark clouds, without definite shape, from which continued rain or snow generally falls. "Rain-cloud."

Clouds of diurnal ascending currents—

8. Cumulus (cu.) Thick clouds with dome-shaped summits and flat bases. "Woolpack clouds." Ragged, detached parts are called fracto-cumulus. Udder-shaped protuberances beneath constitute mammato-cumulus ("pocky cloud," "festoon cloud").

9. Cumulo-nimbus (cu.nb.) Heavy masses, mountainous, turret-shaped, or anvil-shaped; generally with a fibrous sheet above (false cirrus), and commonly accompanied by local showers. "Thunder-clouds," "thunder-heads." Detached fragments are called fracto-nimbus ("scud" or "wrack").

10. Stratus (st.) A uniform layer of cloud resembling a fog but not resting on the ground. Detached fragments are called fracto-stratus.

Howard's classification, made in 1802, is: (1) Cirrus: parallel, flexuous, or diverging fibers, extensible in any or all directions. (2) Cumulus: convex or conical heaps increasing upward from a horizontal base. (3) Stratus: a widely extended, continuous horizontal sheet increasing from below. (4) Cirro-cumulus: small, well-defined, roundish masses in close horizontal arrangement. (5) Cirro-stratus: horizontal or slightly inclined masses bent downward or undulated: separate or in groups of small clouds. (6) Cumulo-stratus: the cirro-stratus blended with the cumulus. (7) Cumulo-cirro-stratus or nimbus: the rain-cloud. This classification, tho no longer in use, is the basis of nearly all subsequent systems. Several hundred names of cloud-forms have been proposed by various writers, or are in popular use; the more important are defined in their alphabetical places in this dictionary. The international classification given above is now, however, officially adopted in all countries.

2. coal, n. 1. Mineral. An amorphous substance derived by the carbonization of vegetation of prehistoric ages, containing free carbon and different hydrocarbons and also complex substances carrying oxygen, sulfur, and nitrogen, contaminated with various amounts of mineral matter, such as pyrites, gypsum, lime, magnesia and silica, soda and potash; found in beds or veins in the earth and used as fuel.

It is brittle, compact, massive, and sometimes laminated, and varies in color from black to brown. Coal is classified into anthracite or hard coal, bituminous or soft coal, subbituminous or cannel, and lignite and peat, according to the amount of volatile matter it contains. Graphitic anthracite has from 1 to 3 per cent. of volatile matter; anthracite, 3 to 10 per cent.; semianthracite, 10 to 15 per cent.; semibituminous, 15 to 25 per cent.; bituminous, above 25 per cent.; and subbituminous, above 40 per cent. Bituminous coals that swell and cake when heated are called coking and are used for the production of coke; they are called cannel (or jet) when rich in gas with low heating power. Subbituminous coals include lignite or brown coal, which has over 50 per cent. of volatile matter; as also has peat coal. Anthracite coal in the American market is commonly graded into the following sizes: steamboat, broken (or grate), egg, stove, nut, pea, buckwheat, rice, barley (the latter being the smallest and also known as No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3 buckwheat). The American coal deposits run from low to high volatility from east to west; thus anthracite is furtherest east, the semibituminous and bituminous in the westerly Appalachian coal-field, and the cannel and lignite coal in the middle west and extreme west.

2. One of the pieces into which coal is broken for use: in Great Britain used in the plural equally with the singular in a collective sense.

3. A glowing or charred fragment of wood or other fuel.

And his heart was hot within him,
Like a living coal his heart was.
LONGFELLOW Hiawatha pt. iv, st. 4.

[< AS. col.] colet.— Albert coal, same as ALBERTITE.— altogether c., a mixture of large and small coal.— black c. [Scot.], coal partially oxidated by igneous rock.— block c., bituminous coal clearly marked with planes meeting at right angles.— Boghead c., a brownish cannel coal, rich in gas and paraffin, from Boghead, Scotland.— bony c., a coal which leaves much residue after being burned.— bottle c. [Scot.], coal used for making gas.— Bovey c., a brown lignite, a poorly burning coal having a bad odor, from the Bovey Tracey, England. See chart of GEOLOGY.— brown c., same as LIGNITE.— brush c. [Eng.], altogether coal.— buckwheat c., the smallest coal marketed from the anthracite region of Pennsylvania.— caking c., a bituminous coal which becomes semi-viscid when heated and at a higher temperature freely gives off gas and forms coke.— cherry c., a soft coal that burns freely without caking.— chik'c., n. [Scot.] Coal as it is taken out of the mine.— c.-and-candle-light, n. [Local, Brit.] The oldsquaw duck.— coal'-back"er, n. [Eng.] A porter who backs, or carries, coal.— c.-backing, n.— c.-balls, n. pl. Pyrite or calcite found in spheroidal and nodular masses associated with coal deposits.— c.-basin, n. An area of coal-measures depressed at the center; loosely, any individual coal-field.— c.-black. I. a. Deep-black; as black as coal. II. n. A specially deep and lustrous black.— c.-brass, n. Pyrite, when occurring in coal-beds. c. blende†.— c.-breaker, n. 1. A machine for breaking coal. 2. A building in which coal is broken, sorted, and cleaned. 3. A person employed at breaking coal.— c.-cracker, n. Same as COAL-BREAKER.— c.-cutter, n. 1. One who operates a coal-cutting machine. 2. A machine for boring holes into and beneath blocks of coal.— c.-drift, n. A passageway in a coal-mine from the outcrop downward along the course of the coal-bed.— c.-drop, n. A chute for coal.— c.-dump, n. 1. A dump-car for coal. 2. A place where coal is dumped. See DUMP[1], n.— c.-face, n. 1. Coal uncovered to view by mining. 2. A spot in a mine where the coal is being worked. 3. That part of a coal-bed in a mine where a drift or room ends.— c.-factor, n. One who buys from colliery-owners and sells directly to distributers; a coal-agent: formerly officially recognized in London.— c.-fauld, n. [Scot.] A store for coal after leaving the mines.— coal'fish", n. 1. A valuable gadoid fish, the green pollack (Pollachius virens) of the Atlantic: named from the dark pigment of its skin. 2. One of various other fishes, as the oolakan, the cobia, and, in New Zealand, a percophid (Paraperca colias).— c.-flitter, n. [Eng.] A coal-factor.

The Coalfish (Pollachius virens). 1/20

See FACTOR, n., 1.— c.-flap, n. [Eng.] A cover for a coal-hole, or a hinged flap closing the entrance to a coal-cellar.— c.-gas, n. 1. The gas produced by burning coal. 2. Ordinary illuminating-gas; a purified mixture of combustible gases distilled from bituminous coal.— c.-goose, n. The cormorant.— c.-heugh, n. [Scot.] Same as COAL-PIT.— c.-hill, n. [Scot.] Coal-mining. That part of a mine in which the pit-head or inlet is situated.— c.-hod, n. A vessel, usually of iron, with a bail, chiefly for carrying coal in small quantities, especially for putting it on the fire.— c.-hole, n. 1. An opening in the street or sidewalk through which coal is delivered. 2. [Eng.] A cellar for coal. 3. [Eng.] The part of a ship's hold where the coal is stored.— coal'hood", n. The blackcap, coal-tit, bullfinch, or one of other small black-headed birds. coal'-head"†; c.-hoodlet†; coal'y-hood"†.— c.-hopper, n. A hopper car for coal.— c.-hulk, n. A vessel from which steamers get supplies of coal.— c.-jungle, n. A swamp on the coast in which the vegetable life found in coal is believed to have thriven.— coal'man, n. [-MEN, pl.] The young of the coalfish.— c.-measures, n. pl. Geol. That division of the Carboniferous series containing the workable beds of coal: consisting of layers from less than one inch to 30 feet thick. See GEOLOGY.— c.-meter, n. [Eng.] An official who superintends the measurement of coal and its delivery.— c.-mill, n. A mill in which coal or coke is ground to a powder for blacking molds in a foundry. Compare COKE.— c.-mouse, n. The coal-tit. cole'mouse"†.— c.-naphtha, n. The hydrocarbons and benzenes obtained in the distillation of coal-tar, which are of a more volatile and lighter nature than the rest of the distillate: used in the preparation of illuminating-gas.—c.-oil, n. Same as PETROLEUM.—c.-passer, n. Naut. One who passes coal from a ship's bunkers to its furnaces and withdraws the ashes, etc.: in the United States navy, the lowest position in the ratings of the engine-room.—c.-pipe, n. Geol. The cast of a tree in sandstone or other rock: sometimes found standing vertically in coal-mines.—c.-pit, n. 1. A pit from which mineral coal is obtained. 2. A pit for making charcoal.—c.-plant, n. 1. A fossil plant of the Carboniferous era. 2. Plants participating in the vegetal accumulation from which coal has been formed.—c.-pocket, n. A building subdivided into many bunkers for the storage of coal and provided with all mechanical appliances for crushing, loading, and unloading it.—c.-rashings, n. pl. [Eng.] Small pieces of shale containing coaly matter.—c.-room, n. Same as ROOM[1], n., 5.—c.-sack, n. 1. A sack for coal. 2. One of several dark spaces in the Milky Way, especially one near the Southern Cross: so called by sailors.—c.-salt, n. Sodium chlorid, or common salt, obtained by evaporating sea-water: a name given because of its dark color, due to smuts settling upon it during evaporation.—c.-scuttle, n. A coal-hod.—c.-scuttle bonnet, an old-fashioned bonnet with projecting sides.—coal'sey, n. [Local, Eng.] Coalfish-fry.—c.-slack, c.-slake, n. Same as SLACK[2], n.—c.-stone, n. A kind of cannel coal.—c.-swamp, n. Marshy or swampy lands, or shallow waters near seacoasts abounding in carboniferous vegetation.—c.-tar, n. The black pitch distilled from bituminous coal, condensed in the manufacture of coal-gas and used in the arts. It yields the aniline dyes and similar compounds.—c.-tar colors, a class of coloring-matters derived from coal-tar, as the aniline colors.—c.-tar naphtha, same as COAL-NAPHTHA.—c.-tit, n. The European black-headed titmouse (Parus ater). c.-titmouse‡; cole'tit"‡.—c.-vend, n. 1. The state of the coal market. 2. The restricted output formerly allowed each mine by the rules of a combination of English colliery-owners.—c.-viewer, n. An engineer who surveys coal-mines, or who oversees the operation of a coal-mine, in the interest of the owner or operator.—c.-wall, n. Same as COAL-FACE.—c.-whipper, n. 1. [Eng.] A man or a machine that raises coal from a ship's hold. 2. One who measures coal and keeps a record for the collection of dues upon it.—c.-whiting, n. Same as COALFISH, 1.—c.-works, n. A coal-mine and its appurtenances; a colliery. c.-workings‡.—craw or crow c., an inferior grade of coal found in thin seams.—dry c., coal carrying only a small percentage of volatile matter.—fibrous c., same as MOTHER-OF-COAL.—flaxseed c., a minute size of anthracite.—peat c., a soft earthy lignite.—run of the mine c., bituminous and other coal as obtained from the mine before sifting and separating.—through c. [S. Wales], altogether coal. Other compounds with coal as the first element are practically self-explaining; as, coal-bed, c.-bin, c.-bunker, c.-chute, c.-field, c.-heaver, c.-mine, c.-wagon, c.-yard.

Coal[1], n. A county in Oklahoma.

co-a'la, n. Same as KOALA.

Coal Cit'y. A village in Grundy county, Ill.

Coal Dale. A village in Schuylkill county, Pa.

Co"a-le'do, 1 kō"ə-lē'do; 2 cō"a-lē'do, n. Geol. An Eocene coal-bearing formation near Coaledo, Oregon.

coal'er, 1 kōl'ər; 2 cōl'er, n. 1. Finance. A railway whose chief business is transporting coal, as a road directly connected with coal-producing regions. 2. pl. [Colloq., U. S.] Finance. Stocks of coal-carrying railroads. 3. A person who makes a business of supplying ships with coal.

coal'er-yi, n. A colliery.

co"a-lesce', 1 kō"ə-les'; 2 cō"a-lēs', ri. [-LESCED'; -LESC'-ING.] To grow or come together so as to form one body, combination, or product; fuse; blend; as, some word-elements coalesce in pronunciation. [< L. coalesco; see COALESCENT, a.]

The ice yielded to the sun, rills were formed, which united to rivulets, and these again coalesced to rapid brooks.
TYNDALL Hours of Exercise ch. 17, p. 180. [A. 1871.]

SYN.: see UNITE.—Prep.: a thing coalesces with another or with others; two or more things coalesce to or in one, more commonly into.

co"a-les'cence, 1 kō"ə-les'ens; 2 cō"a-lēs'ɛnç, n. 1. The act or process of coalescing, or the state so produced. 2. Biol. The structural union of like parts or organs. co"a-les'cen-cy‡. 3. Psychol. The unobserved assimilation or combination of mental elements so as to form a whole in consciousness; the fusion of elementary sensational elements or mental images in a single object-perception or idea.—law of molecular coalescence, the physical law that crystals will grow rounded and adhere in spheroidal masses in a colloidal medium.

co"a-les'cent, 1 kō"ə-les'ent; 2 cō"a-lēs'ɛnt, a. Growing together; united; uniting: applied in biology to similar parts or organs when united in growth. [< L. coalescen(t-)s, ppr. of coalesco, < co-, together, + alo, nourish.]

co"a-les'cent, n. One who or that which coalesces; specifically, a vowel, with a consonantal tendency, that coalesces with another vowel to form a single sound; as, in house, boy, aisle, the u, y, and i are coalescents.

The separation of the coalescents from the vowels being quite modern, their difference is seldom recognized in alphabets. This is a grave defect.

cob'worm", 1 kŏb'wûrm"; 2 cŏb'wûrm", n. [Local, Brit.] The larva of a cockchafer.

co'ca, 1 kō'kə; 2 cō'ca, n. [S. Am.] The dried leaves of a South-American shrub (Erythroxylon coca) of the flax family, used in medicine as a tonic, and chewed by the native Indians as a nervine stimulant.

Coc-agne', 1 kŏk-ān'; 2 cŏc-ăn', n. Same as COCKAIGNE.

Coc-agne', Land of. Same as LAND OF COCKAIGNE.

co'ca-in, } 1 kō'kə-in, -in or -ĭn, or (colloq.) ko-kē'n'; 2 co'ca-ine, } cō'ca-in, -în or -ĭn, or (colloq.) co-cān', n. Chem. A white, bitter, crystalline alkaloid ($C_{17}H_{21}NO_4$) contained in coca-leaves: used in medicine as a local anesthetic. — Antidotes: alcoholic stimulants and amyl nitrite. — co'ca-in-ism, n. Med. A morbid condition produced by the habitual or the excessive use of cocain; poisoning by cocain. — co'ca-in-ize, tt. Med. To bring under the specific effect of cocain. — co"ca-in-i-za'tion, n. — co"ca-in"o-ma'ni-a, n. Med. 1. Morbid craving for or misuse of cocain. 2. Delusional insanity resulting from cocainism. — co"ca-in"o-ma'ni-ac, n.

co'ca-mîn, 1 kō'kə-mĭn; 2 cō'ca-mîn, n. Chem. A characteristic alkaloid derived from Peruvian coca, and now regarded as reducible to two or more elements. co'ca-mine†.

Co"ca-na'da, 1 kō"kə-nē'də; 2 cō"ca-nā'dā, n. An Indian seaport, the capital of Godavari district, Madras.

co-carde', 1 ko-kärd'; 2 co-cärd', n. [F.] Entom. One of the red, evaginable vesicles in the thorax of malachiid beetles.

co'ca-yl, 1 kō'kə-ĭl; 2 cō'ca-ȳl, n. Chem. An organic group (CH_3)NC_4H_7, which in combination with the oxypropionic acid radical forms the base ecgonine which is a saponification product of the alkaloid cocain. [< COCA + -YL.]

Coc-ca'ce-æ, 1 kŏ-kē'sī-ī; 2 cŏ-cā'çe-ē, n. pl. A group of schizomycetes, including spheroidal forms, single or variously grouped. See BACTERIA. [< COCCUS, 3.] — coc-ca'ceous, a.

coc"ca-gee', 1 kŏk"ə-gī'; 2 cŏc"a-ğē', n. [Eng.] A cider-apple; also, cider made from it.

Coc-ce'ius, or Coc-ce'jus, 1 kŏk-sī'yus or kŏk-tsē'yus; 2 cŏc-çē'yŭs or cŏc-tse'yus, Johannes (9/10 1603–11/10 1669). A German theologian; professor at Leyden; founder of the "federal school" of theology (Coccelanism, or Coccelan system), teaching that the Old Testament prefigures the church for all time.

Coc-ce'lus, 1 kŏk-sī'yus; 2 cŏc-çē'yŭs, Nerva. A Roman jurist of the 1st century; grandfather of Emperor Nerva.

Coc-ce'ji, 1 kŏk-tsē'yī; 2 cŏc-tse'yi, Samuel, Baron von (10/20 1679–10/7 1755). A German jurist who framed a new code of laws for Frederick the Great.

coc-cel'ic, 1 kŏk-sel'ĭk; 2 cŏc-çĕl'ic, a. Chem. Relating to coccelic acid ($C_{21}H_{22}O_7$), derived from Cladonia coccifera in crystalline form. [< COCCUS.]

coc"ce-lin'ic, 1 kŏk"sī-lĭn'ĭk; 2 cŏc"çe-lĭn'ic, a. Chem. Relating to coccelinic acid ($C_{19}H_{12}O_4$), obtained in crystals by treating coccelic acid with hydriodic acid.

coc-cer'ic, 1 kŏk-ser'ĭk; 2 cŏc-çĕr'ic, a. Obtained from cochineal. — cocceric acid (Chem.), a monobasic acid ($C_{31}H_{32}O_{13}$) obtained in crystalline form from cochineal in combination with cocceryl alcohol.

coc'ce-rin, 1 kŏk'sī-rĭn; 2 cŏc'çe-rin, n. Chem. A cocceryl ester ($C_{16}H_{16}(C_{31}H_{31}O_{13})_2$) derived from cocceric acid. It occurs in cochineal.

coc'ce-ryl, 1 kŏk'sī-rĭl; 2 cŏc'çe-rȳl, n. Chem. The organic radical, $C_{30}H_{59}$, of cocceryl alcohol. [< COCCUS + -YL.] — cocceryl alcohol, a dihydric alcohol ($C_{30}H_{60}(OH)_2$).

coc'ci-, } 1 kŏk'sĭ-, kŏk'o-; 2 cŏc'çi-, cŏc'o-. From Gr. kok- coc'co-, } kos, berry; kermes-insect: combining forms. See COCCUS. — Coc'ci-dæ, n. pl. Entom. A family of phytophthirian hemipters having one-jointed tarsi and scale-like larvæ, and living in plants; scale-insects. — coc'cid, a. & n. — coc'cid-did, a. & n. — coc'cid-doid, a. — Coc-cid"i-id'e-a, n. pl. Protoz. A section or subclass of sporozoans with a euglena phase, of minute size, spherical shape, and a structure like that of an egg-shell. — coc-cid'i-id, a. & n. — coc-cid"i-id'e-an, a. & n. — coc'ci-din, n. Chem. The constituent of the plastinoid granules in Coccidia labbé. coc'ci-dine‡. — coc-cid'i-oid, a. Protoz. Of or pertaining to a coccidium. — Coc-cid"i-oi'des, n. A genus of sporozoan parasites, some species of which are said to invade the skin and produce nodules resembling those of tuberculosis. — Coc-cid"i-o-mor'pha, n. pl. An order of spore-bearing organisms consisting of Hæmosporidia and Coccidia. — coc-cid"i-o'sis, n. A disease caused by the presence of coccidia. — coc-cid'i-um, n. [-I-A, pl.] 1. Protoz. A parasitic coccidiidean (genus Coccidium): an egg-shaped psorosperm. 2. Bot. A spherical non-porous conceptacle produced by certain rose-spored algæ (Floridex). — coc"ci-dol'o-gy, n. The scientific analysis and classification of the Coccidæ. — coc-cif'er-ous, a. Bot. Bearing or producing cocci or berries. — coc'ci-form, a. Bot. Having the form of cocci or berries. — coc"ci-gen'ic, a. Due to the presence of a coccus; produced by a coccus. — coc-cig'er-ous, a. Bearing berries.
Other words beginning with these prefixes will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

coc'cin, 1 kŏk'sĭn; 2 cŏc'çin, n. A red dye; nopalin. [< COCCUS.]

Coc"ci-nel'la, 1 kŏk'sī-nel'ə; 2 cŏc'çi-nĕl'a, n. 1. Entom. A genus typical of Coccinellidæ. 2. [c-] A beetle of this genus; a ladybug. [< Gr. kokkinos, scarlet, < kokkos, berry.] — Coc"ci-nel'li-dæ, n. pl. Entom. A family of clavicorn beetles with the body usually rounded, convex, and the head sunk in the emarginate prothorax: as the ladybugs, etc. — coc"ci-nel'lid, a. & n. — coc"ci-nel'loid, a.

coc-cin'e-ous, a. Colored with or like cochineal. coc-cin'e-an†. — coc-cin'ic, a. Org.Chem. Pertaining to one or the other of two isomeric diabasic acids ($C_5H_4O_5$) yielded by cochineal. — coc"co-ba-cil'lus, n. A short bacillus like a coccus found in cases of swine plague. — Coc"co-bac-te'ri-a, n. pl. Biol. A group of bacteria containing both globular and rod-like forms: named together under the assumption that they constituted life-phases of the same organism. — coc"co-bac-te'ri-um, n. — coc"co-chro-mat'ic, a. Bot. Exhibiting color scattered in masses of granules. Opposed to PLACOCHROMATIC. — coc-cog'nin, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_{20}H_{32}O_8$) contained in the seeds of Daphne mezereum. Probably the same as daphnin. — coc-cog'nic, a.

Coc"co-go-na'les, 1 kŏk"o-go-nē'liz; 2 cŏc"o-ğo-nā'lēş, n. pl. Bot. An order of unicellular algæ (class Schizophyceæ) found singly or in colonies. Some forms become short filaments. Compare HORMOGONALES. — coc'co-gone, n. Bot. A sporangium-like propagative organ of certain cyanophyceous algæ. coc"co-go'ni-um†.

coc'coid, 1 kŏk'oid; 2 cŏc'oid, a. Like cocci: applied to certain forms of bacteria which tend to be round in form; cociform. [< COCCUS + Gr. eidos, form.]

coc'co-lite, n. 1. Mineral. A granular white, green, or black variety of pyroxene. 2. A coccolith. — coc'co-lith, n. One of certain minute oval or rounded bodies often abundant in deep-sea mud and believed to be unicellular algæ.

Coc"co-lo'bis, 1 kŏk'o-lō'bĭs or ko-kel'o-bis; 2 cŏc'o-lō'bis or cō-cŏl'o-bis, n. Bot. A genus of evergreen trees or climbing shrubs of the buckwheat family, peculiar in its pulpy perianth surrounding the ripe fruit. Of its various species, natives of tropical and subtropical America, several are in ornamental stove cultivation. C. uvifera, the West Indian sea-grape tree, with edible berries, yields a variety of kino from its bark. This species and C. floridana, the pigeon-plum, are common to southern Florida and the West Indies. [< COCCUS + LOBE.] Coc"co-lo'ba‡.

coc'co-sphere, n. A spherical mass bearing cocoliths enclosed in a delicate calcareous envelop. — Coc"cos-te'i-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A Devonian family of placoderm fishes having a cranial shield of few plates and large dorsal plates with an anterior median keel for connection with neural arches. — coc-cos'te-id, n. — coc-cos'te-oid, a. & n. — Coc-cos'te-us, n. Ich. 1. A genus typical of Coccosteidæ. 2. [c-] A fossil fish of this genus. — Coc"co-thraus-ti'næ, n. pl. Ornith. A subfamily of fringilloid birds having nasal bones produced backward and mandible deep behind, including the grosbeaks. Coc"co-thraus'tes, n. (t. g.) — coc"co-thraus'tine, a. & n. — coc'cous, a. Bot. Bearing or composed of cocci.

coc'cu-lin, 1 kŏk'yu-lĭn; 2 cŏc'yu-lin, n. A bitter neutral crystalline compound ($C_{18}H_{18}O_{10}$) found in Cocculus coccus-lus in combination with picrotoxin.

Coc"cu-lin'i-dæ, 1 kŏk"yu-lin'ĭ-dĭ; 2 cŏc"yu-lin'i-dē, n. pl. Conch. A family of rhipidoglossate gastropods with an unsymmetrical gill and an entire limpet-like shell. Coc"cu-li'na, n. (t. g.) [Cp. COCCULUS.] — coc"cu-lin'id, n. — coc"cu-lin'oid, a.

Coc'cu-lus, 1 kŏk'yu-lus; 2 cŏc'yu-lŭs, n. Bot. A small, widely distributed, mainly tropical genus of climbing plants of the moonseed family. [< Gr. kokkos, berry.]
— cocculus indicus (Med.), the berry of Anamirta cocculus, a narcotic and stimulant, used in ointments for cure of ringworm and barbers' itch, sometimes in the manufacture of beer and for stupefying fish.

coc'cus, 1 kŏk'us; 2 cŏc'ŭs, n. [coc'ci, 1 -sai; 2 -çi, pl.] 1. Bot. (1) One of the dry one-seeded portions into which a schizocarp splits up. (2) A spore mother-cell in which the spores are contained for a time after their maturity. 2. Entom. (1) [C-] A genus typical of Coccidæ. (2) An insect of this genus. 3. A spherical or nearly spherical bacterium. [< Gr. kokkos, berry, kermes-insect.] coc'cule‡.

coc-cyg'e-al, 1 kŏk-sij'ī-əl; 2 cŏc-çĭğ'e-al, a. Of, pertaining to, or situated near the coccyx; caudal. [< Gr. kokkyx (kokkyg-), coccyx.] coc-cyg'e-ous‡. — coccygeal gland. 1. In man, a small glandular body of unknown function near the coccyx, probably the vestige of abortive vessels. 2. Ornith. See UROPYGIAL. coc-cyg'e-o-, 1 kŏk-sij'ī-o-; 2 cŏc-sĭğ'e-o-. A combining form in anatomical terms, referring to the coccyx.

coc"cy-gec'to-my, 1 kŏk"sī-jek'tə-mī; 2 cŏc"çy-ğĕc'to-my, n. Surgical removal of the coccyx. [< COCCYX + -TOMY.]

Coc-cy'ges, 1 kŏk-sai'jiz; 2 cŏc-çȳ'ğēş, n. pl. Ornith. An order or other group of birds, variously limited, but always including the cuckoos and related forms. [< Gr. kokkyges, pl. of kokkyx, cuckoo.]

coc-cyg'e-us, 1 kŏk-sij'ī-us; 2 cŏc-çĭğ'e-ŭs, n. [-I, 1 -ai; 2 -i, pl.] A muscle of the pelvis inserted upon the tail. In human beings it serves to retain the coccyx in place in parturition and defecation. [< Gr. kokkyx (kokkyg-), coccyx.]

coc"cy-go-dyn'i-a, 1 kŏk"sī-go-din'ī-ə; 2 cŏc"çy-ğo-dĭn'i-a, n. Pathol. Neuralgic pain in the region of the coccyx. [< Gr. kokkyx, coccyx, + odynē, pain.] coc"cy-o-dyn'i-a‡.

Coc"cy-go-mor'phæ, 1 kŏk"sī-go-mōr'fī; 2 cŏc"çy-ğo-mōr'fē, n. pl. Ornith. A group of desmognathous birds with spongy flattened maxillopalatines, including cuckoos, toucans, kingfishers, trogons, etc. [< Gr. kokkyx (kokkyg-), cuckoo, + morphē, form.] — coc'cy-go-morph, a. & n. — coc"cy-go-mor'phic, a.

coc'cyx, 1 kŏk'siks; 2 cŏc'çĭçeş, n. [-CY-GES, 1 -sai'jiz; 2 -çȳ'ğēş, pl.] [Gr.] Anat. The caudal end of the spine: in man and anthropoid apes composed of three or four ankylosed vertebræ. See illus. under BONE.

Coc"cy-zi'næ, 1 kŏk'sī-zai'nī; 2 cŏc'çy-zī'nē, n. pl. Ornith. A subfamily of cuculoid birds having 10 tail-feathers and bill with obtuse culmen, including the yellow-billed and black-billed cuckoos. Coc-cy'zus, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. kokkyx, cuckoo.] Coc"cy-gi'næ‡. — coc'cy-zine, a. & n.

coch., cochl., coch. amp., etc. See ABBREVIATION.

Co"cha-bam'ba, 1 kō"chə-bām'bə; 2 cō"chā-bām'bā, n. 1. A department of Bolivia; 21,417 sq. m. 2. Its capital; 8,370 ft. above the sea.

coch"e-nil'lin, 1 kŏch'ī-nil'ĭn; 2 cŏch'e-nil'in, n. Carminic acid: formerly so called. [< COCHINEAL.]

Co"che-to'pa Pass, 1 kō"chə-tō'pə; 2 cō"che-tō'pa. A pass through the Saguache Range, Colo.; alt., 10,032 feet.

co-chil' sa-po'ta, 1 ko-chĭl' sə-pō'tə; 2 co-chĭl' sā-pō'ta. Bot. 1. A tall Mexican tree (Casimiroa edulis) of the rue family, bearing large peach-flavored fruits. 2. A fruit of the tree. [< Aztec cochitzapotl, sleep fruit.]

Co"chi-mi', 1 kō"chĭ-mī'; 2 cō"chi-mi', a. Ethnol. Designating (1) the Yuman dialect spoken throughout the southern half of California; (2) the tribes or groups, collectively, speaking this dialect.

co'chin1, 1 kō'chĭn; 2 cō'chin, n. A variety of large domestic fowl, of Asiatic origin, having heavily feathered legs, full breast, and short tail. See FOWL. [< Cochin-China.] — co'chin-chi"na, n. A breed of the domestic hen brought from Cochin-China, the original of the cochin and brahma.

Co"chin'2, 1 kō'shən'; 2 cō'çhĭn', n. Charles Nicolas (2/3 1715–4/3 1790), a French designer and engraver; son and grandson of engravers of the same name; Picturesque Journey in Italy.

Co-chin'3, 1 ko-chĭn' or kō'chĭn; 2 co-chĭn' or cō'chin, n. 1. A native state in S. W. Madras, India; 1,362 sq. m. 2. Its capital, a seaport.

Co'chin-Chi'na, 1 kō'chĭn; 2 cō'chin, n. The southernmost state of French Indo-China; 20,000 sq. m.; capital, Saigon.

Co'chin-Chi-nese', 1 kō'chĭn-chai-nīs' or -nīz'; 2 cō'chin-chi-nēs' or -nīş'. I. a. Of or belonging to Cochin-China. II. n. 1. A native or naturalized inhabitant of Cochin-China. 2. The language of Cochin-China; Anamese, belonging to the Indo-Chinese branch of the Turanian.

coch'i-neal, 1 kŏch'ī-nīl; 2 cŏch'i-nēl (XIII), n. 1. A dye-stuff consisting of female cochineal-insects (Coccus cacti) killed and dried by heat. The dried insect is about one-fifth of an inch long, purplish and transversely wrinkled. It yields a brilliant scarlet dye, the pigment carmine, a small quantity of wax, and is used medicinally.
2. The cochineal-insect. [< Sp. cochinilla, < L. coccinus, scarlet, < coccum, < Gr. kokkos, berry.] coch'i-neel†. — brilliant cochineal, an azo-dye, palatine scarlet. See under SCARLET. — coch'i-neal-fig" or -cactus, n. A cactus (Nopalea cochinillifera). — c.-insect, n. A scale-insect (Coccus cacti) of Mexico, Central America, etc., introduced into the Canary Islands, Java, etc. It lives on Nopalea and other cacti. — c.-red, n. Carmine. See RED.

coch"i-ni'to, 1 kŏch'ī-nī'tō; 2 cŏch'i-nī'to, n. [Sp. Am.] A surgeon-fish (Xesurus punctatus) of the Gulf of California.

co-chi'no, 1 ko-chī'no; 2 co-chī'no, n. [Sp. Am.] A trigger-fish (Balistes retula) found in warm parts of the Atlantic.

Co-chi'se, n. 1. 1 ko-chī'zē; 2 co-chī'şe. A Chiricahua Apache chief, son of Nachi, who successfully maintained warfare against Americans and Mexicans from 1861 until his death in 1874. 2. 1 ko-chīs'; 2 co-chīs'. A county in S. E. Arizona (the scene of Chief Cochise's exploits); 6,147 sq. m.; county-seat, Tombstone.

Co-chit'u-ate, 1 ko-chĭt'yu-ēt; 2 co-chit'yu-āt, n. A small lake in Middlesex county, Mass., which partly supplies Boston with water.

coch'le-a, 1 kŏk'lī-ə; 2 cŏc'le-a, n. [-Æ, 1 -ī; 2 -ē, pl.] 1. Anat. One of the passages of the internal ear. In mammals it is arranged in a spiral form like a snail-shell. See illus. under LABYRINTH. 2. The Archimedean screw. 3. Bot. A plant-organ which assumes a spiral shape, as the pods of the honey-locust. 4†. A spiral staircase. [LL., < L. cochlea, snail, < Gr. kochlias, < kochlos, shell-fish.] — coch'le-an, a. Cochleate. — coch'le-ar', a. Of or pertaining to the cochlea.

coch'le-ar², 1 kŏk'lī-ər; 2 cŏc'le-ar, a. Bot. Spoon-like: applied unmeaningly to a form of imbricative estivation in which one spoon- or helmet-shaped part is wholly exterior and larger than the others, which it surrounds.

coch'le-ar, n. 1. Gr. Ch. The spoon in which the consecrated elements are given to communicants. 2. An ancient Roman or Greek measure for medicine; a spoonful. [L., < cochlea; see COCHLEA.]

coch"le-a're, 1 kŏk'lī-ē'rī; 2 cŏc'le-ā'rē, n. [-RI-A, pl.] [L.] Med. A spoon; spoonful.

Coch"le-a'ri-a, 1 kŏk'lī-ē'rī-ə; 2 cŏc'le-ā'ri-a, n. Bot. A genus of perennial herbs of the mustard family, natives of temperate or boreal regions. The scurvy-grass (C. officinalis) is the best-known species, and yields a useful oil. [< L. cochlear; see COCHLEAR, n.] coch"le-ar'i-form, 1 kŏk'lī-ar'ī-fōrm; 2 cŏc'le-ār'i-fôrm, a. 1. Having the form of a snail-shell; cochleate. 2. Spoon-shaped; cochlear. [< L. cochlear (see COCHLEAR, n.) + -FORM.] coch-le'i-form‡. — cochlear form process (Anat.), the thin, bony incasement of the tensor tympani muscle where it appears in the tympanum.

Coch"le-a-ri'i-dæ, 1 kŏk'lī-ə-ral'ī-dĭ; 2 cŏc'le-a-ri'i-dē, n. pl. Ornith. A family of herodionine birds with a bill like an inverted boat; the boatbills. Coch"le-a'ri-us, n. (t. g.) [< L. cochlear; see COCHLEAR, n.] — coch"le-a'ri-id, n. — coch"le-a'ri-oid, a.

coch"le-a'rin, 1 kŏk'lī-ē'rĭn; 2 cŏc'le-ā'rin, n. A substance resembling camphor, derived in crystals from the spoonwort.

coch'le-a-ry, 1 kŏk'lī-ē-rī; 2 cŏc'le-ā-ry, a. Like a spiral shell; winding; cochleate.

coch'le-ate, 1 kŏk'lī-ēt; 2 cŏc'le-āt, a. Spirally twisted like a snail-shell. coch'le-an†; coch'le-at"ed‡. — coch"le-ar-thro'sis, n. Anat. A screw-joint, one in which the surfaces shift laterally a little when they glide round each other. — coch'le-oid. I. a. Cochleate; spiral. II. n. A mathematical spiral curve. — coch'le-ous, a. Having a spiral form; cochleate.

coch"le-i'tis, 1 kŏk'lī-aī'tĭs or -ī'tĭs; 2 cŏc'le-ī'tis or -ī'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the cochlea. coch-li'tis‡.

Coch'li-des, 1 kŏk'lī-dīz; 2 cŏc'li-dēş, n. pl. Conch. 1. The dicœcious gastropods. 2. The Gasteropoda. [< Gr. kochlis (pl. kochlides), dim. of kochlos, shell-fish.] Coch'li-dæ‡.

Coch"li-di'i-dæ, 1 kŏk"lī-daī'ī-dĭ; 2 cŏc"li-di'i-dē, n. pl. Entom. Same as LIMACODIDÆ.

coch-lid"i-o-sper'mate, 1 kŏk-lid'ī-o-spûr"mēt; 2 cŏc-lid'i-o-spĕr"māt, a. Characterized by seeds which are convexo-concave in formation. [< Gr. kochlos, shell-fish, + sperma, seed.]

Coch"li-o-don'ti-dæ, 1 kŏk"lī-o-don'tĭ-dĭ; 2 cŏc"li-o-dŏn'ti-dē, n. pl. Ich. A Carboniferous family of prosarthrous sharks having at least one transverse row of teeth fused into a continuous curved plate. Coch-li'o-dus, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. kochlos, shell-fish, + odous, tooth.] Coch"li-o-don-tol'dæ‡. — coch'li-o-dont, a. & n. — coch"li-o-don'tid, n. — coch"li-o-don'toid, a. & n.

Cod. 1/24

2. Any bag or bag-shaped envelop. Specif.: (1) The belly; paunch. (2) The bag of a trawl-net. (3) The scrotum. 3. [North. Eng. & Scot.] A pillow or cushion. 4. The bearing of an axle. Used as recently as 1881. [< AS. codd, bag.] coddet.— cod'-piece", n. A baggy flap or loose piece attached in front to the tight hose worn by men late in the 15th and early in the 16th century.— cod-slip, n. A pillow-case.

cod[3], n. [Slang.] A fellow; codger; fool.

C. O. D., Cod., abbr. See ABBREVIATION.

co'da, 1 kō'də; 2 cō'da, n. Mus. 1. An independent passage, introduced at the conclusion of a movement, forming a more decided and usually somewhat elaborate termination; the finale of a sonata movement or of a fugue. 2. The tail of a note. [It., < L. coda, cauda, tail.]

co-dam'in, } 1 ko-dam'ɪn; 2 co-dăm'in, n. Chem. A co-dam'ine, } white crystalline alkaloid ($C_{20}H_{25}NO_4$) contained in opium. [< cod- (in CODEIN) + AMIN.]

Cod. Arg., abbr. Codex Argenteus.

Co-das'ter, 1 ko-das'tər; 2 co-dăs'ter, n. A genus of fossil echinoderms, occurring in the Devonian and Carboniferous systems of Europe. [< Gr. kŏdŏn, bell, + aster, star.] Co'do-nas"ter‡.

Cod. Civ., abbr. Code Civil.

cod'dam, 1 kod'əm; 2 cŏd'am, n. [Eng.] A public-house guessing-game, the point being to guess in which hand a coin, button, or the like, is concealed. cod'am‡; cod'dom‡.

cod'der[1], 1 kod'ər; 2 cŏd'er, n. [U. S.] A person or a vessel engaged in cod-fishing.

cod'der[2], n. [Dial. or Obs.] One who gathers cods or peas.

cod'der[3], n. [Dial., Eng.] A leather-worker; a saddler.

cod'di-a, 1 kod'ɪ-ə; 2 cŏd'i-a, n. A black ant of Ceylon that gives a severe bite.

Cod'ding-ton, 1 kod'ɪŋ-tən; 2 cŏd'ing-ton, William (1601–11/11678). An English Quaker; one of the founders of Rhode Island.

cod'dle[1], } 1 kod'l; 2 cŏd'l, vt. [COD'DLED, COD'DLING; cod'le, } COD'DLING.] To treat as a baby or an invalid; make effeminate; pamper.

To our recklessness they appear to coddle themselves, but we speedily discern that in nothing is their good sense more salutary. W. C. BROWNELL French Traits p. 128. [s. 1889.]

[Orig. 'castrate,' < COD[2], n., bag, pillow; confused with F. cadeler, pamper.] SYN.: see CARESS; PAMPER.— cod'dler, n. [Colloq.] One who has been coddled.

cod'dle[2], vt. [COD'DLED; COD'DLING.] 1. To seethe or simmer in water; cook. 2. [Dial., Eng.] To roast in an oven, as apples. 3. To injure (tobacco) by fermentation. [< Icel. kvotla, dabble.] cod'let‡.

cod'dle, n. A coddled or pampered person.

cod'dy-mod"dy, 1 kod'ɪ-mod'ɪ; 2 cŏd'y-mŏd'y, n. [Dial.] A gull in its first plumage; the black-headed gull.

code[1], 1 kōd; 2 cōd, vt. [COD'ED; COD'ING.] [Colloq.] To codify.

code[2], 1 kōd; 2 cōd, n. 1. Law. A unified and coordinated body of law; especially, reenactment, in improved and systematic form, of previously existing law, whether derived from statute, prescription, or judicial decisions.

The constitution of the United States has . . . left them [the States] their own codes of criminal law. WEBSTER Works, Landing at Plymouth in vol. ii, p. 205. [L. B. & CO. 1865.]

2. A system of signals or of characters used to represent letters or words, or in any way to communicate intelligence; as, a cipher code; naval code; telegraphic code. See TELEGRAPH. 3. A system of rules, regulations, or principles generally approved and formally applied for conduct in particular cases; as, the social code; the medical code; the code of honor. [F., < L. codex, caudex, tablet.] SYN.: see LAW; LEGISLATION.

— black code, the body of laws in the United States relating to the slave population in slave States before emancipation.— civil c., a code regulating the civil relations of citizens.— C. Napoléon, the French civil code compiled under the direction of Napoleon I., and largely a reenactment of the Justinian code.— C. Noir [F.], literally, black code; a series of unusually humane laws made by the French in Santo Domingo, 1685.— c. of Hammurabi, a body of laws enacted by Hammurabi (about 2250 B. C.), sixth king of the first dynasty of Babylon, and inscribed on a stele of black diorite, discovered (Dec., 1901–Jan., 1902) in three fragments by J. J. M. de Morgan at Persepolis, on the site of Susa, capital of the ancient Elam. The stele, which is supposed to have been carried to Susa from the temple E-barrah at Sippar, contains the text of 247 of Hammurabi's laws, which show a wholly unsuspected degree of culture, and present a number of parallels to the early Hebrew legislation. See illus. under CUNEIFORM.— c. of honor, certain rules and methods of procedure that govern affairs of honor and duels.— criminal c., a code defining crimes and prescribing the nature and degree of punishment.— Gregorian c., the collection of imperial constitutions made by the Roman jurist Gregorius.— Hermogenian c., a code probably compiled by Hermogenianus, a Roman jurist of the 4th century. It was supplementary to the Gregorian Code.— international c., see under INTERNATIONAL.— Justinian c., the systematized body of Roman law, made by order of the emperor Justinian in the 6th century, comprising (1) the Code proper, consisting of 12 books of imperial statutes digested into systematic order, (2) the Institutes, (3) the Pandects, and (4) the Novels. The Justinian code has furnished the material for, or largely shaped, the law of the modern civilized world. See INSTITUTE; NOVEL; PANDECT.— Mosaic c., the code of laws, religious, social, and civil, embodied by Moses in the Pentateuch.

We adopt the appropriate division [of the Mosaic Code] . . . into 'three principal groups of laws or ritual observances, in addition to the Ten Commandments,' viz.: 1. The Collection, Ex. xxi.–xxiii. 2. The Deuteronomic [Code, Deut. xii.–xxvi. . . . 3. The Levitical Legislation, . . . scattered through several parts of Exodus and the books of Leviticus and Numbers. W. H. GREEN Moses and the Prophets art. iii, p. 50. [c. & DNOS. 1883.]

— New York Codes, sometimes called the Field Codes, the codifications of the laws of New York, as required by the Constitution of 1846, completed at periods from 1850 to 1865 — one, under the "Commissioners of Practise and Pleading" (composed of Loomis, Graham, and D. D. Field), the other under the "Commissioners of the Code" (composed of D. D. Field, Noyes, and Bradford), including (1) the Code of Civil Procedure, (2) the Code of Criminal Procedure, (3) the Political Code, (4) the Civil Code, and (5) the Penal Code. These codes have been partly adopted in New York and substantially or wholly in many other States.— penal c., same as CRIMINAL CODE.— Rhodian c., the code of maritime laws formulated by the Phenician colonists of Rhodes.— Stricklandian c., a system of zoological nomenclature devised by Hugh Strickland.— the c., see CODE OF HONOR, above.— Theodosian c., a collection of Roman laws, published in the reign of Theodosius II., A. D. 438.

co-dec"il-na'tion, 1 kō-dek"il-nē'shən; 2 cō-dĕc"il-nā'shon, n. Magnetism. The complement of the angle of declination. [< CO-[2] + DECLINATION.]

co"de-fen'dant, n. See CO-[1].

co-de'in, } 1 ko-dī'ɪn or kō'dɪ-in; 2 co-dē'in or cō'de-in, co-de'ine, } n. Chem. A white crystalline alkaloid ($C_{18}H_{21}NO_3$) derived from morphin. Antidotes: brandy; strong warm black coffee. [< Gr. kōdeia, poppy-head.] co-de'la‡; co"de-i'na‡.

code'less, 1 kōd'les; 2 cōd'lĕs, a. Without a code.

Code N., abbr. Code Napoléon.

co"de-pos'it, 1 kō'di-poz'ɪt; 2 cō'de-pŏs'it, n. Electrolysis. A deposit additional to that for which the electrolysis is undertaken.

co-dep"o-si'tion, 1 kō-dep'o-zish'ən; 2 cō-dĕp'o-sish'on, n. Electrolysis. The deposition, simultaneously, of two or more substances upon the electrode.

co-de-ter"mi-na'tion, 1 kō-di-tūr"mi-nē'shən; 2 cō-de-tĕr"mi-nā'shon, n. 1. One of two or more determinations of the same matter. 2. The mutual relation of determining the same matter.

co-det'ta, 1 ko-det'tə; 2 co-dĕt'tä, n. [It.] Mus. A short coda; a passage connecting the first part of a fugue with the episode.

co'dex, 1 kō'deks; 2 cō'dĕks, n. [COD'I-CES, 1 kod'ɪ-sīz; 2 cŏd'i-cēs, pl.] [L.] 1. A manuscript, in the general form of a book, in uncial characters, especially of the New Testament, or of certain classic writings. Of the Scripture codices, the most important are the Alexandrine (C. Alexandrinus, 5th century), in the British Museum; the Codices Ambrosiani (5th and 6th centuries), containing chiefly fragments of the New Testament and preserved at Milan; the Sinaitic (C. Sinaiticus, 4th century), in St. Petersburg; and the Vatican (4th century), in the Vatican library at Rome. These are all of the Greek Scriptures. The Laudian c., or C. Laudianus, of the Acts, is at Oxford. Of the Vulgate, the most remarkable is the C. Amiatinus. Of classics, the most famous is the C. Ambrosianus, of the Iliad.— c. rescriptus. 1. Same as PALIMPSEST, 1. 2. A collection of canons or of formulas, especially of medical formulas. 3. A code of laws. 4. Any manuscript.

cod'fish", 1 kod'fish"; 2 cŏd'fish", n. A cod, or its flesh used as food.— codfish aristocracy [Am.], those who make a vulgar display of lately acquired wealth: formerly applied to families in Massachusetts said to have grown rich out of the fisheries. MAITLAND Slang Dict.— c. ball or cake, see FISH-BALL.

codg'er, 1 koj'ər; 2 cŏdg'er, n. 1. One of testy or eccentric character, especially an old man: used in jocular depreciation. 2. Chap; fellow. 3. A niggardly or miserly man; also, a pedler or tramp; cadger. [Var. of CADGER.]

Co"di-a'ce-æ, 1 kō"dɪ-ē'sɪ-ī; 2 cō"di-ā'çe-ē, n. pl. Bot. A family of sea-algæ, typical of the order Codiales. [< CODIUM.]— co"di-a'ceous, a.

Co"di-æ'um, 1 kō"dɪ-ī'um; 2 cō"di-ē'um, n. Bot. A genus of shrubs of the spurge family, nearly allied to Croton, but differing from it in having numerous stamens in the male flowers and no petals in the female. The genus consists of 3 or 4 species, natives of the Molukkas and adjacent islands. The species Codiæum pictum, with numerous varieties, is cultivated in hothouses under the name of Croton. [< Malabar kodi.]

Co"di-a'les, 1 kō"dɪ-ē'līz; 2 cō"di-ā'lēs, n. pl. Bot. An order of green algæ with a thallus formed of a cœnocyte. See CHLOROPHYCEÆ.

cod'i-cal, 1 kod'ɪ-kal; 2 cŏd'i-cal, a. [Rare.] Of or pertaining to a code or codex.

cod'i-ces, 1 kod'ɪ-sīz; 2 cŏd'i-cēs, n. Plural of CODEX.

cod'i-cil, 1 kod'ɪ-sil; 2 cŏd'i-çĭl, n. Law. A supplement adding to, revoking, or explaining something in the body of a will. [< L. codicillus, dim. of codex (codic-), writing.]— cod"i-cil'la-ry, a. Pertaining to or of the nature of a codicil.

cod"i-fi-ca'tion, 1 kod'ɪ-fɪ-kā'shən; 2 cŏd'i-fi-cā'shon, n. Law. The act or process of reducing laws to a code.

What is codification? . . . It is the collection, condensation, systematizing and reconciling of what is scattered or contradictory. F. LIEBER Political Ethics vol. i. pt. i, bk. ii, ch. 6, p. 230. [L. 1890.]

cod'i-fi-ca"to-ry, 1 kod'ɪ-fɪ-kā"to-rɪ; 2 cŏd'i-fi-cā"to-ry. a. Relating to codification; as, the codificatory contributions of Maimonides.

cod'i-fy, 1 kod'ɪ-fai or kō'dɪ-fai; 2 cŏd'i-fy or cō'di-fy (XIII), vt. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] 1. To reduce (laws, etc.) to a systematized code. 2. To collect and arrange; systematize; as, to codify signals.

Codify, maximize, and minimize . . . [are] among the numerous useful expressions with which Bentham has enriched our language. FITZEDWARD HALL Modern English ch. 8, p. 317, note 1. [a. 1873.]

co-dil'la, 1 ko-dil'ə; 2 co-dil'a, n. The coarse part of hemp or flax. [Prob. dim. of L. coda, tail.]

co-dille', 1 ko-dil'; 2 co-dil', n. [F.] The situation in the game of omber when a player, winning fewer tricks than his opponent, loses double.

Cod'ing-ton, 1 kod'iŋ-tən; 2 cŏd'ing-ton, n. A county in N. E. South Dakota; 786 sq. m.; county-seat, Watertown.

cod'ist, 1 kōd'ist; 2 cŏd'ist, n. [Rare.] One who makes or advocates codes; one versed in codes; a codifier.

Co'di-um, 1 kō'di-um; 2 cō'di-ūm, n. Bot. A genus of green algæ with extensively branched thallus and non-septate filaments, whose extremities are often composed of club-shaped segments forming a rind, while in the center the filaments are loosely interwoven. [< Gr. kōdeia, head.]

co"di-vi'sion, 1 kō'di-viz'ən; 2 cō'di-vĭzh'on, n. Classification according to two or more principles.

cod'le, 1 kod'l; 2 cŏd'l, v. & n. Same as CODDLE.

cod'ling', 1 kod'liŋ; 2 cŏd'ling, n. 1. A young cod. 2. A gadoid fish (genus Physcis) with narrow filamentous ventral fins of 2 or 3 rays. 3. [Austral.] An ophidioid fish (Genypterus australis or blacodes).

cod'ling², n. [Eng.] 1. One of a group of varieties of cooking-apple, elongated and tapering; formerly, any hard or green apple used for stewing. 2†. A raw youth. [< COD², n.; cp. AS. cod-æppel, cod-apple, quince.] cod'-lint. — cod'ling-moth", n. A small tortricid moth (Carpocapsa pomonella), the larva of which is the apple-worm. — codlins and cream, see HAIRY WILLOW-HERB, under WILLOW-HERB.

cod'ling³, n. A balk sawed off of proper length for riving into staves.

Co"do-gno', 1 kō'do-nyō'; 2 cō'do-nyō', n. A town in Milan province, Italy.

co-dom'i-nant, 1 kō-dem'i-nənt; 2 cō-dŏm'i-nant, a. Arboriculture. Forming a part of the main canopy, but not among the tallest: said of forest-trees. [< CO-¹ + DOMINANT.]

co'don, 1 kō'dən; 2 cō'don, n. A small bell; also, the bell-shaped mouth of a trumpet. [< Gr. kōdōn, bell.] — co"do-nos'tome, n. Zooph. The orifice of a medusan umbrella through which its cavity communicates with the external water. co"do-nos'to-mat.

Co'do-nas"ter, 1 kō'do-nas'tər; 2 cō'do-nās'ter, n. Same as CODASTER.

Co"do-nel'i-dæ, 1 kō'do-nel'i-dē; 2 cō'do-nĕl'i-dē, n. pl. A family of Anthomedusæ with 4 to 6 simple radial canals and simple unbranched tentacles. Co-do'ni-um, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. kōdōmon, dim. of kōdōn, bell.] Co-don'i-dæ‡; Sar-si'i-dæ‡. — co-do'ni-id, a. & n.

co-dor'nitch, 1 ko-dōr'nitch; 2 co-dôr'nĭtch, n. [Porto Rico.] [Sp.] A quail of the genus Colinus.

co'dot, 1 kō'dot; 2 cō'dŏt, n. Projectⁿ se Geom. Any point, not a dot, in which the connectors of a polystigm connect. [< CO-¹ + DOT¹, n.] — codot tristigm (Projective Geom.), a tristigm whose determining dots are the three codots of a tetrastigm.

Cod'ring-ton, 1 kod'riŋ-tən; 2 cŏd'ring-ton, n. 1. Christopher (1668–4/7 1710), a British soldier; governor of the Leeward Islands; born in Barbados, where he founded a college which bears his name. 2. Sir Edward (4/7 1770–4/7 1851), an English admiral; destroyed the Turkish fleet at Navarino, Oct. 20, 1827.

Cod'rus, 1 kod'rus; 2 cŏd'rŭs, n. The last king of Athens (–1070? B.C.), none being deemed worthy to succeed him.

cods'head", 1 kodz'hed"; 2 cŏdz'hĕd", n. A dull-witted or stupid person, as having a head no better than a codfish's.

cod'ware", 1 kod'wār"; 2 cŏd'wār", n. [Scot.] A pillow-case.

Co'dy, 1 kō'di; 2 cō'dy, William Frederick (2/7 1846–1/10 1917). An American scout and guide; campaigner against rebel Indians; showman; sobriquet, "Buffalo Bill."

coe, 1 kō or kū; 2 cō or cų, vt. [Local, Eng.] To infest (sheep) with coe. — coe¹, n. Sheep-rot. [shaft of a mine.

coe², 1 kō; 2 cō, n. [Local, Eng.] A shed or shelter over the Cœ"ci-li'i-dæ, etc. Same as CÆCILIIDÆ, etc. [CÆCUM.

cœ'cum, 1 si'kum; 2 cē'cŭm, n. [CŒ'CA, pl.] Same as co'-ed', 1 kō'-ed'; 2 cō'-ĕd', n. [College Slang, U. S.] A young woman being educated at the same institution with young men. — co-ed, a. Designating a college or other institution where both sexes are educated.

co-ed"u-ca'tion, 1 kō-ej'u-[or -ed'yu-]kē'shən; 2 cō-ĕj'u-[or -ĕd'yu-]eā'shon, n. [U. S.] 1. The education of young men and young women together in the same classes or institution: applied more especially to collegiate education.

Co-education answers perfectly in institutions like Antioch and Oberlin in Ohio, where manners are plain and simple, where the students all come from a class in which the intercourse of young men and young women is easy and natural. BRYCE Am. Commonwealth vol. ii, pt. vi, ch. 112, p. 800. [MACM. '11.]

2. The teaching of white and negro children in the same schools. — co-ed'u-cate, vt. — co-ed"u-ca'tion-al, a.

co-ef'fi-ca-cy, 1 ko-ef'i-kə-si; 2 co-ĕf'i-ca-çy, n. The efficacy of two or more forces acting together; joint efficacy.

co"ef-fi'cien-cy, 1 kō'e-fish'en-si; 2 cō'ĕ-fish'ĕn-çy, n. The effectual cooperation of two or more causes or forces; joint efficiency. — commercial coefficiency of a dynamo, the ratio of the useful or available energy in the external circuit to the mechanical energy required to drive it.

co"ef-fi'cient, n. 1. Any agent that unites its action with that of some other agent for the procuring of a certain result. 2. Alg. A number or letter, especially the former, put before an algebraic expression to indicate that the expression is to be multiplied by that number; as, in the formula $4ab$, 4 is the coefficient of ab; in $4abx$, $4ab$ is the coefficient of x. 3. Physics. A number indicating the degree of a quality possessed by a substance, either permanently or under fixed conditions; as, the coefficient of expansion of iron. 4. Psychol. The distinguishing mark or peculiarity of a state of mind; as, coefficient of external reality, of self, of memory, etc. — Admiralty coefficients (Naval Arch.), a number of empirical coefficients which are based upon a series of rules adopted in Admiralty practise at an early date in steamship-construction; see DISPLACEMENT C. and MIDSHIP-SECTION C. — block c. (Naval Arch.), a coefficient expressing the ratio of the underwater volume of a vessel to the volume of its circumscribing rectangular parallelepiped; compare COEFFICIENT OF FINENESS. — c. of absorption, (Phys.), a constant expressing the absorbing power of a substance. Specif.: (1) In gases, the volume of a gas dissolved by one volume of a liquid. (2) Optics. The ratio of the intensity of light absorbed by a medium to the total intensity of the incident light. — c. of absorption of radiation, same as ABSORPTION OF LIGHT. See LIGHT. — c. of contraction (Hydraul.), the ratio of the transverse section of the vena contracta, at a distance of half its diameter from the aperture, to the area of the aperture. — c. of correlation (Biometry), the average of the products of the correlated pairs of deviations, divided by the product of their mean square variabilities. — c. of coupling (Elec.), in high-frequency measurements, the mathematical designation of relations between the mutual inductance and the respective inductance of coils joined as one circuit. — c. of depression (Phys. Chem.), the lowering observed in the freezing-point when one gram of a substance is dissolved in 100 grams of liquid. — c. of discharge (Hydraul.), the ratio borne by the actual discharge from a reservoir to that which would have taken place without coefficients of velocity and contraction, representing various impediments to flow. — c. of displacement, same as BLOCK C. — c. of efficiency (Mech.), the ratio borne by the tensile strength of a joint to that which the solid material would possess in the absence of the joint. — c. of elasticity, a number which, when multiplied into a number expressive of the stress, gives the resulting strain. — c. of ellipticity, the ratio of the major axis of an ellipse to its minor axis. — c. of emission, the ratio of the surface conductivity of a body (see CONDUCTIVITY) and that of the ideal black body having the same temperature. — c. of expansion, a number which, when multiplied into the number expressing the rise of temperature, gives the resulting expansion of a body: called linear or cubical, according as the expansion is in length only or in volume. — c. of fatigue (Physics), a numerical constant indicating the degree to which a substance evidences elastic fatigue. — c. of fineness (Mech.), the ratio of an area to the area of the circumscribed rectangle, or of a volume to the volume of the circumscribed rectangular parallelepiped; specif. (Naval Arch.), a coefficient giving the ratio of the area of the immersed midship section, or similar curved line of a vessel, to the area of its circumscribed rectangle, or expressing the ratio of the under-water volume to (1) the volume of the circumscribed rectangular parallelepiped (see BLOCK c.) or (2) the volume of the cylinder that is circumscribed about the midship section. — c. of friction, a number which, when multiplied into the number expressing the pressure between two bodies, gives the resulting friction. — c. of hysteresis (Physics), the number of units of energy lost as heat in a cubic centimeter of iron, when the magnetizing process is continued through a cycle. — c. of induced magnetization, same as MAGNETIC SUSCEPTIBILITY, 2. See SUSCEPTIBILITY. — c. of inertia (Statics), in the expression for the kinetic energy of a rigid dynamical system, a coefficient of the generalized components of velocity. It is a function of a generalized coordinate of the system and varies with the configuration. — c. of inhibition (Bacteriol.), the degree of concentration of any disinfectant which, when added to a medium, will prevent the multiplication and development of bacteria, while not killing them. — c. of leakage (Elec.), the ratio existing between the total magnetic flux and the amount of useful flux. — c. of mobility (Statics), in a rigid dynamical system subjected to the action of an extraneous force, the coefficient of the squared generalized components of momentum. — c. of molecular depression, see C. OF DEPRESSION. — c. of nutation, same as CONSTANT OF NUTATION. — c. of Peltier effect (Elec.), the number of units of heat-energy generated at the junction of two metals on the passage of a unit of electric current through them. — coefficients of performance, same as ADMIRALTY COEFFICIENTS. — c. of purity (Sugar-making), the ratio of pure sugar (sucrose) to the solids in solution in the beet- or cane-juice. — c. of reduction (Ballistics), the product of the coefficients of form, tenuity, and steadiness, these three depending on the form of the projectile, the tenuousness of the medium, and the nicety of centering. — c. of resistance (Hydraulics), the ratio of the loss of head, due to frictional resistance, to the residual head of a liquid discharging from a reservoir. — c. of restitution, a fraction which, when multiplied into the relative velocity of two colliding bodies just before impact, gives their relative velocity just afterward. — c. of rigidity, the ratio of the intensity of a stress to the displacement due to it, per unit distance. — c. of rotation, same as ROTATORY C. — c. of run-off, the ratio between the rainfall and the run-off of a region. — c. of safety (Engineering), the ratio existing between the breaking stress and the working stress of any material or parts of construction. — c. of self-induction, same as MUTUAL INDUCTANCE. — c. of slip, the ratio of the internal to the external friction of a vapor or gas. — c. of thermometric conductivity, the ratio of the conductivity of any substance to the heat required to raise a unit volume of the substance one degree C. — c. of transmission, the ratio of the radiant energy transmitted by a unit layer of any absorbing medium (generally one centimeter) to that otherwise disposed of (absorbed, reflected, etc.). — c. of variability. 1. A number, derived by the laws of chance, showing that there is an even probability that the noted value of any given phenomenon will be found within a given range. 2. Same as C. OF VARIATION. — c. of variation, a coefficient resulting from the division of the diversity of the individuals of a population, race, or species, by the index of variability, multiplying the quotient by 100. — c. of velocity (Hydraulics), the ratio of the actual velocity to that which would have been attained in the absence of frictional resistance or other impediment, as in the discharge of a liquid from a reservoir. — c. of ventilation, a formula expressing the number of renewals per unit of time of the air in a given space, as $\frac{A}{U}$, in which A represents the number of renewals and U the given time. — c. of viscosity, the ratio between the stress imposed upon a fluid in motion and its velocity gradient. — c. of wind-pressure, the pressure of the wind blowing against a stationary object, or the resistance of the air to an object that is moving. — cylindrical c., same as C. OF FINENESS. — differential c., the ratio of the infinitesimal increase of a function to that of a variable on which the function depends; a derivative. — displacement c. (Naval Arch.), the ratio of the product of the two-thirds power of the displacement by the cube of the speed to the indicated horse-power. — dissociation c. (Chem.), the quotient resulting from the division of the concentration of the ions of dissociation by the concentration of the undissociated molecules. — hyetal c., same as PLUVIOMETRIC C. — indeterminate c., any one of a set of arbitrarily assumed coefficients whose values are ascertained as a step in a process of calculation, as in the solution of a set of equations. — ionization c., a number expressing the degree of electrolytic dissociation of a dissolved electrolyte or its electrolytic disks. — Lilienthal coefficients (Aerodynamics), coefficients indicating the relation between the vertical and horizontal components of the push of a moving air-current against an inclined plane. — midship-section c., the ratio borne by the product of the midship-section area by the speed cubed to the indicated horse-power. — pluviometric c. (Meteorol.), the ratio between the rainfall during any month to what it would have been had precipitation been distributed uniformly throughout the year. — prismatic c., same as C. OF FINENESS. — propulsive c. (Naval Arch.), the ratio of the effective to the indicated horse-power of a steamer's propelling engines. — rotatory c., a constant indicating the capacity of substances that are optically active to turn the plane of polarization. — superior lethal c. (Bacteriol.), that degree of concentration of a disinfectant which will destroy the spores of bacteria in water having a temperature of 20°–25° C. — temperature c. Physics. 1. A coefficient denoting the variation in the electrical resistance of a substance with change of temperature. 2. A numerical factor expressing in degrees centigrade the variation in temperature of any physical constant.

Coe'hoorn, 1 kō'hōrn; 2 cō'hōrn, n. 1. Menno, Baron van (1632–3/7 1704), a Dutch military engineer and general; constructed several famous fortresses. 2. [c-] A small howitzer or mortar invented by him, generally 4.6 inches in caliber: carried by men or on launches. Co'hoorn‡; Co'hornt.

Coel, 1 keil or kōl; 2 cōil or cōl, n. 1. Celt. Myth. A god of the sky and of war: probably the original of "old King Cole." 2. Same as ALIGARH.

Cœ"la-can'thi, 1 si"lə-kan'thai; 2 çē"la-căn'thi, n. pl. Ich. The Cœlacanthidæ in an enlarged sense. — cœ'la-canth, a. & n. — Cœ"la-can'thi-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A Carboniferous to Cretaceous family of actinistian crossopterygian fishes, with deeply imbricated cycloidal scales, a pair of large jugular plates, 2 dorsals, 1 anal, and obtusely lobate paired fins. Cœ"la-can'thus, n. (t. g.) [< CŒLO-² + Gr. akantha, thorn.] Cœ"la-can-thoi'dæ‡; Cœ"la-can-thoi'de-i‡. — cœ"la-can'thid, n. — cœ"la-can'thoid, a. & n. — cœ"la-can'thous, a.

cœ"la-na-glyph'ic, 1 si"lə-nə-glif'ik; 2 çē"la-na-glĭf'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or carved in cavo-rilievo. [< CŒLO-² + ANAGLYPHIC.]

cœ'lar, 1 si'lər; 2 çē'lar, a. [Rare.] Relating to the sky.

Cœ'lebs, 1 si'lebz; 2 çē'lĕbs, n. 1. In Hannah More's Cælebs in Search of a Wife, a bachelor who marries a woman with qualities described by his mother. 2. [Humorous.] A bachelor in search of a model wife.

Cœ"lel-min'tha, 1 si"lel-min'thə; 2 çē"lĕl-mĭn'tha, n. pl. Helminth. A section of entozoans with an intestinal canal, including the threadworms, etc. [< CŒLO-² + Gr. helmins (helminth-), worm.] Cœ"lel-min'thes‡. — cœ"lel-minth, n. — cœ"lel-min'thic, a.

Cœ-len'ter-a, 1 si-len'tər-ə; 2 çē-lĕn'ter-a, n. pl. 1. Zooph. A branch, phylum, or grade of the animal kingdom with an enteric cavity occupying the entire interior of the body and functioning as a vascular as well as a digestive system: including sea-anemones, corals, jelly-fish, etc. The Cœlentera are variously divided into Anthozoa, Hydrozoa, and Ctenophora, or into Actinozoa and Hydrozoa.

Cœlentera.

1. Longitudinal section of a rhizostoma: u, umbrella; gc, gastric cavity; s, subumbrella; g, genital band; sp, subgenital pit; f, filament; sm, subumbrellar muscles; rr, radial vessels; so, sense-organs; op, olfactory pits; ol, ocular lobe; st, shoulder-tuft; dt, dorsal tuft; vt, ventral tuft; t, terminal part of arms. 2. pr, perradii; ir, interradii; ar, adradii; sr, subradii; rl, marginal lobes; t, tentacles; gf, gastral filaments; m, circular muscle of the subumbrella; sk, sensory bodies (rhopalia); g, sexual glands (gonads); in the middle the oral cross.

The Cœlentera, as contrasted with other Metazoa (but not Parazoa), consist of two layers of cells only, an outer layer or ectoderm, an inner layer or endoderm. . . . A second essential difference . . . is that in the former all spaces in the interior of the body are referable to a single cavity of endodermal origin . . . often termed the cœlenteron; the spaces are always originally continuous with one another, and are in almost every case permanently so. This single cavity and its lining serve apparently for all those functions (digestion, excretion, circulation, and often reproduction) which in more complex organisms are distributed among various cavities of independent and often very diverse origin. Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. vi, p. 641.

Among the higher cœlenterate creatures the contractile substance is partly differentiated into muscular fibres.

cœ-len'ter-on, 1 si-len'tər-en; 2 çē-lĕn'ter-ŏn, n. Embryol. The primitive intestinal cavity; the archenteron. — cœ-len'ter-ic, a.

cœ-les'tine, 1 si-les'tin; 2 çe-lĕs'tin, n. Mineral. Same as CELESTITE.

Cœ"le-syr'i-a, 1 si"li-sir'i-ə; 2 çē"le-sŷr'i-a, n. A valley in Syria, 100 m. by 10 m.; ruins of Baalbec.

co-el'ho, 1 ko-el'yo; 2 co-el'yo, n. [Pg.] Same as CONEJO, 2.

cœ'li-a, 1 si'li-ə; 2 çē'li-a, n. [-Æ, 1 -i; 2 -ē, pl.] Anat. A cavity, especially one of the ventricular cavities of the central nervous system. [< Gr. koilia, cavity, < koilos, hollow.] — cœ'il-an, a.

cœ'li-ac, cœ'line, a. Same as CELIAC.

cœ"li-ec'to-my, cœ"li-o-dyn'i-a, cœ"li-o-my'al-gi-a, cœ'li-o-scope, etc. See CELI-.

cœ-lig'e-nous, 1 si-lij'i-nəs; 2 çē-lĭg'e-nūs, a. [Rare.] Born in heaven. [< CŒLO- + -GEN.]

cœ'line, 1 si'lin or -lin; 2 çē'lin or -lin, n. [Rare.] Same as CERULEUM.

Co-el'lo, 1 ko-el'yo; 2 co-el'yo, Claudio (1621–4/7 1693). A Spanish painter; Collocation of the Host.

cœ'lo-². Derived from Greek koilos, hollow: a combining form (before a vowel cœl-). — cœ'lo-blast, n. A part of the endoblast of insect embryos.— Cœ"lo-blas'te-æ, n. pl. A group of chlorophyceous algæ, now called Siphoneæ.— cœ"lo-blas'tic, a. Having several nuclei in a single cell-wall.— cœ"lo-blas'tu-la, n. [-LÆ, pl.] A hollow blastula.— Cœ"lo-cor'mi-dæ, n. pl. Ascid. A family of composite ascidiaceans having a large axial cavity with a terminal aperture. Cœ"lo-cor'mus, n. (t. g.) — cœ"lo-cor'mid, n.— cœ"lo-cor'moid, a.— cœ"lo-cyr'te-an, a. Characterizing vertebræ with concave anterior face and convex posterior.— cœ'lo-dont. I. a. Having hollow teeth, as certain saurians. II. n. A hollow-toothed saurian.— cœ"lo-gas'tru-la, n. [-LÆ, pl.] A gastrula having a blastopore leading into an open enteric cavity.— Cœ"lo-gor'gi-dæ, n. pl. A family of arborescent alcyonacean Anthozoans with branches formed by axial zooids of the second order, and branchlets with axial zooids of the third order. Cœ"lo-gor'gi-a, n. (t. g.)— Cœ"lo-gor'gi-id, a. & n.— Cœ-log'y-ne, n. Bot. A large genus of epiphytic orchids with large membranous flowers.— Cœ"lo-lep'i-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A Silurian family of fishes of unknown relationship, having minute dermal tubercles hollow within and coated with ganoin. Cœ"lo-le'pis, n. (t. g.) Cœ"lo-le-pid'i-dæ‡. — cœ-lol'e-pid, cœ"lo-lep'i-did, n.— cœ"lo-lep'i-doid, cœ-lol'e-poid, a. & n.— cœ'lom, n. The body-cavity of a metazoan; the space between the viscera and the body-wall. See illus. under GERM-LAYER. cœ-lo'ma‡ [-MA-TA, pl.]; cœ'lome‡; cœ'lum‡.— Cœ-lo'ma-ta, n. pl. Zool. A primary division of metazoic animals containing all except the Cœlentera.— cœ-lo'mate, a. & n.— cœ-lom'a-tous, a.— cœ"lo-mes'o-blast, n. Embryol. The mesoblast immediately surrounding the cœlom.— cœ-lom'e-ter, n. See CŒLOMETER.— cœ-lom'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of a cœlom. cœ"lo-mat'ic‡.— cœlomic fluid, a whitish fluid possessing nutritive qualities found in the body-cavity of some annulate worms.— cœlomic pouch (Embryol.), a pouch produced by evagination from the walls of the space between the viscera and the body-wall.— Cœ"lo-mo-cœ'la, n. pl. The principal division (grade) of enterozoa, including most animals; contrasting with Cœlenterata.— cœ"lo-mo-dæ'um, n. The part of a duct derived from the ectoderm.— cœ-lom'o-pore, n. Zool. The passageway between protocœlom and exterior.— cœ-lom'o-stome, n. The funnel-shaped opening of a cœlomoduct.

cœ"lo-nav'i-ga'tion, n. That branch of navigation in which the location of a ship is determined from observation of the heavenly bodies: opposed to geonavigation.

Cœ"lo-neu'ra, n. pl. Zool. The Chordata.— cœ"lo-neu'ral, a.— cœ"lo-plan'u-la, n. [-LÆ, pl.] Embryol. A germ at the stage when it represents a cœlogastrula without a blastopore.— cœ"lo-plat'y-an, a. Having a concave plane, as a vertebra with anterior face concave and posterior flat.— Cœ"lop-tych'i-um, n. A genus of mushroom-shaped fossil sponges representing the family Cœloptychidæ. — cœ'lo-sperm, n. Bot. 1. A seed with the ventral face incurved so that the base and apex approach. 2. An umbelliferous plant with cœlospermous seed.— cœ"lo-sper'mous, a.— cœ'lo-stat, n. An instrument, similar to a heliostat, for showing a stationary image of a celestial body: used with a telescope.

Cœ"lo-syr'i-a, 1 sĭ"lo-sĭr'ɪ-ə or sel"o-; 2 cē"lo-sȳr'i-a or cēl"o-, n. Bib. (Apocrypha). Cœle-syria.

cœ'lo-thel, n. Embryol. The epithelium of mesoblastic origin lining the true cœlom of the embryos of vertebrates.

cœ'lum, 1 sĭ'lum; 2 cē'lŭm, n. Same as CŒLOM.

Cœ-lu'ri-a, 1 sĭ-lū'rɪ-ə; 2 cē-lū'ri-a, n. pl. Herp. An order of dinosaurian reptiles, generally united with the Megalosaurt.— cœ-lu'ri-an, a. & n.

Cœ-lu'ri-dæ, 1 sĭ-lū'rɪ-dē; 2 cē-lū'ri-dē, n. pl. Herp. A family of megalosaurian reptiles with pneumatic bones and long metatarsals. Cœ-lu'rus, n. (t. g.) [< CŒLO-³ + Gr. oura, tail.] — cœ-lu'rid, n.— cœ-lu'roid, a. & n.

Cœ'lus, 1 sĭ'lus; 2 cē'lŭs. n. Rom. Myth. One of the oldest of the gods; son of Æther and Dies (air and day); the Greek Uranus.

co-emp'tion, 1 ko-emp'shən; 2 co-ĕmp'shon, n. 1. Rom. Law. A form of civil marriage in which the contracting parties sold themselves to each other. 2. [Archaic.] The buying up of commodities in order to control the market; a corner. 3†. A joint buying. [< L. coemptio(n-), < co- (< cum), together, + emo, buy.] — co-emp'tion-al, a. Of or pertaining to coemption. co-emp'tiv(e‡.— co-emp'tion-a"tor, n. A participator in coemption.— co-emp'tor, n. One who buys in order to control the market.

cœ-nac'u-lum, n. Same as CENACLE.— cœ-nac'u-lous, a. Addicted to suppers.

cœ-nan'thi-um, n. Same as CLINANTHIUM.

co-en'doo, 1 ko-en'dū; 2 co-ĕn'dōō, n. The prehensile-tailed Brazilian porcupine (Cercolepes prehensilis). co-en'dou‡. [together; be of equal duration.

co"en-dure', 1 kō"en-dūr'; 2 cō"ĕn-dūr', vi. To endure cœ-nen'chy-ma, 1 sĭ-nen'ki-mə; 2 çē-nĕn'cy-ma, n. The calcareous tissue that unites the polyps or individuals of a compound actinozoan, as a coral-polyp.

Each newly formed coral-polyp develops a skeleton of its own, which is either confluent with that of the others, or is united with them by calcification of the connecting substance of the common body. This intermediate skeletal layer is then termed cœnenchyma. HUXLEY Anat. Invert. ch. 3, p. 147. [A. 1888.]

cœn"es-the'sis, 1 sen"es-thĭ'sĭs; 2 çĕn"ĕs-thē'sis, n. The general feeling of being in the body, or bodily consciousness, due to the mélange of all the simultaneous unlocalized sensations, especially those arising from the thoracic and abdominal organs. See SENSATION. [< CŒNO- + ESTHESIS.] cœn"æs-[or -es-]the'si-a‡; cœn"æs-the'sis‡.

cœ'no-, 1 sĭ'no-; 2 çē'no-. From Greek koinos, common: a combining form (before a vowel cæn-).— cœ-no'bi-arch, n. The head of a convent.— cœ'no-bite, cœ"no-bit'ic, etc. Same as CENOBITE, etc.— Cœ"no-bit'i-dæ, n. pl. Crust. A family of anomurans having very elongated internal antennæ, including terrestrial hermit-crabs. Cœ"no-bi'ta, n. (t. g.) — cœ-nob'i-tid, n.— cœ-nob'i-toid, n.— cœ-no'bi-um, n. Same as CENOBIUM.— cœ'no-blast, a. Spong. The primitive embryonic layer, whence the endoderm and mesoderm are developed.— cœ"no-blas'tic, a.— cœ"no-cla'di-a, n. Bot. The natural uniting of tree branches.— cœ'no-cyte, n. Biol. An aggregation of protoplasmic units enclosed within a common wall. The less-developed algæ and fungi furnish many examples.— cœ-nœ'ci-um, n. [-CI-A, pl.] The common dermal system of a polyzoan colony.— cœ-nœ'ci-al, a.— cœ-nœ'cic, a.— cœ"no-gam'ete, n. Bot. A multinucleate gamete.— cœ-nog'a-my, n. Same as CENOGAMY. — Cœ"no-go"ni-a'ce-æ, n. pl. A family of gymnocarpous lichens.— Cœ"no-go'ni-um, n. The type-genus of the family Cœnogoniaceæ. — Cœ"no-grap'tus, n. A genus of Ordovician graptolites.— cœ"no-psy'che, n. The consciousness of a community of cells as opposed to individually conscious cells intercommunicating.— cœ'no-sarc, n. The fleshy basis connecting all the zooids of a compound zoophyte.— cœ"no-sar'cal, a.— cœ"no-sar'cous, a.— cœ'no-site, n. A commensal animal.— cœ'no-some, n. The stem of a colony of Siphonophora.— cœ"no-sphæ'ra, n. Same as CENOSPHÆRA.— cœ-nos'te-on, n. Ich. The chief bone of the shoulder-girdle of a teleost fish; the clavicle.— cœ-nos'te-um, n. The common calcareous skeleton of a hydrocoralline.— cœ-nos'te-al, a.— Cœ"no-the-ca'li-a, n. pl. An order of anthozoans with a calcareous skeleton like a madrepore's, whose species are mostly extinct.— cœ'no-type, n. A common or fundamental type.— cœ"no-typ'ic, a.

cœ'nure, 1 sĭ'nūr; 2 çē'nūr, n. The many-headed bladderworm or scoleciform larval stage of a dog-tapeworm (Tænia cœnurus) found in the brain of sheep, and producing gid or staggers. [< CŒNO- + Gr. oura, tail.] — cœ-nu'rus, n. A cœnure: formerly regarded as a genus.

co-e'qual, 1 kō-ī'kwəl; 2 cō-ē'kwal. I. a. Of the same value, rank, or importance; perfectly equal; equal and conjoined; coextensive. co-e'qualɪt.

II. n. The equal of another or others, especially if united with them. [< LL. coæqualis, < L. co-, co¹; and see EQUAL.] — co"e-qual'i-ty, n. The state of being coequal; mutual equality.— co-e'qual-ize, vt. To make or become equal (with another). co-e'qualɪ; co-e'qual-ise‡.— co-e'qual-ly, adv.— co-e'qual-ness, n.

co-erce', 1 ko-ūrs'; 2 co-ērç', v. [CO-ERCED', CO-ERC'ING.] I. t. 1. To impel to or restrain from action by physical or moral force; constrain to do or forbear by force or fear; compel; force; as, to coerce a voter.

No state is more powerful in war than a republic when its resources are wielded by a dictator, . . . or coerced by his extraordinary authority.
T. E. MAY Democracy in Europe vol. ii. p. 446. [A. & S. 1889.]

2. To bring about by coercion; as, to coerce obedience. 3. To bring into subjection or under control by superior force; crush down or out; restrain; repress; as, capital must not coerce labor.

II. i. To use coercive measures, as in government; as, the liberals coerce as well as the conservatives. [< L. coercere < co- (< cum), together, + arceo, press.] Syn.: see COMPEL.— co-erc'er, n.— co-erc'i-bil'i-ty, n.— co-erc'i-bl(e, a. 1. That may be coerced. 2. Condensible: said of a gas.— co-erc'i-bl(e-ness, n.— co-erc'i-bly, adv.

co-er'cion, 1 ko-ūr'shən; 2 co-ēr'shon, n. 1. Forcible constraint or restraint, moral or physical, of an individual; compulsion of a free agent. 2. Law. That degree of physical force or of intimidation which renders an act void or voidable. 3. Government by force; specif., the use of extraordinary powers conferred by exceptional legislation; as, the policy of coercion in Ireland.

This penalty . . . can only be inflicted in two ways: by the agency of the courts and ministers of justice, or by military force; by the coercion of the magistracy, or by the coercion of arms.
HAMILTON in The Federalist No. xv, p. 69.

4. Compression; pressure. [< L. coercio(n-), < coercitus, pp. of coerceo; see COERCE.] co-erc'ment‡; co-er'tion†.— co-er'cion-a-ry, a. Coercive.— co-er'cion-ist, n. One who advocates coercion in government.

co-er'cive, 1 ko-ūr'sĭv; 2 co-ēr'çiv. I. a. Serving or co-er'civ, } tending to coerce; having the power or quality of coercing. co-er'ci-tiv(e‡. II. n. That which coerces. — coercive or coercitive force, the power of resisting magnetization or demagnetization.

— co-er'civ(e-ly, adv.— co-er'civ(e-ness, co"er-civ'i-ty, n. The quality of being coercive or having coercive force.

Cœ-reb'i-dæ, 1 sĭ-reb'i-dĭ; 2 çē-rĕb'i-dē, n. pl. Ornith. A family of passerine birds having the tarsi compressed behind, nine primaries, and bill curved downward to an acute tip; honey-creepers. Cœ're-ba, n. (t. g.) [< Braz. guira-cœreba, name of a bird.]— cœ're-bid, n.— cœ're-boid, a.— Cœ"re-bi'næ, n. pl. Ornith. A subfamily of Cœrebidæ with bill long and curved.— cœ're-bine, a. & n.

cœ-ru'le-in, cœ"ru-les'cent. Same as CERULEIN, etc.

cœ-ru"le-o-lac'tite, 1 sĭ-rū"lɪ-o-lak'tīt; 2 çe-ru"le-o-lăc'tit, n. A white to blue aluminum phosphate. [< CERULEAN + L. lact(i), milk.]

co"es-sen'tial, 1 kō"e-sen-shəl; 2 cō"ĕ-sĕn'shal, a. Having the same essence; united in being.— co"es-sen"ti-al'i-ty, n. The quality or condition of being coessential.— co"es-sen'tial-ly, adv.

co"e-ta'ne-ous, 1 kō"ɪ-tē'nɪ-us; 2 cō"e-tā'ne-ŭs, a. [Rare.] Coming into existence or originating at the same time; of equal age; coeval; contemporary. co"æ-ta'ne-ous‡.

The Jewish is, indeed, a nation sui generis, the only nation we know of whose records are coetaneous with their primitive origin.

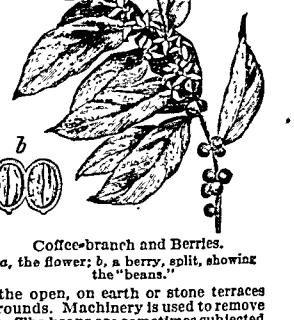
cof'fee¹, 1 kof'ɪ; 2 cŏf'e (XIII), n. 1. The seeds of any species of the genus Coffea, especially of the C. arabica, plano-convex pyrenes enclosed in pairs, with their flat faces toward each other, in dark cherry-like berries. When the ripe fruit has been gathered, the seeds or "beans" are subjected to "pulping" or "hulling." In West-Indian preparation, the newer method, the green berries are freed from the pulp and their coverings by maceration in water, with the aid of a pulping-machine. By sun-drying, the older method, the berries are completely dried, in the open, on earth or stone terraces or cemented drying-grounds. Machinery is used to remove the dried pulp or hulls. The beans are sometimes subjected to polishing, or to cleaning processes, and to a slight extent are colored to meet the preferences of users of the raw bean for some particular color. The bean must be roasted and ground before it is available for infusion. The secret of good coffee is to have the beans freshly roasted, freshly ground, and the infusion freshly made. Different varieties of coffee show a wide diversity of flavor, as does a single variety. Flavor depends upon climate, soil, and age, the last tending to produce a mellow flavor. About 75 per cent. of the coffee used in the United States comes from Brazil, which furnishes about 60 per cent. of the world's supply. Mocha coffee, commonly considered the best, is frequently imitated, in order to supply a demand in excess of its production. The imitation is done by admixture of other kinds, or by the use of small Santos or first-growth beans, or Santos coffee grown from Mocha seed. Java c. is similarly imitated or counterfeited. What is principally sold as Java coffee in the United States is really Padang, and is grown in Sumatra. Maracaibo and Central-American coffee is also largely used in substitution or imitation of the Java beans, closely resembling them in size and appearance, and being little, if any, inferior in quality and flavor. A large part of the coffee actually grown in the island of Java is consumed in Europe. Rio c. is mostly rank and strong in flavor, while nearly all other kinds, except Mocha, may be classed as mild.



Coffee-branch and Berries.
a, the flower; b, a berry, split, showing the "beans."

2. The tree that bears the seeds, having opposite horizontal branches, and oval dark-green shining leaves about 6 inches long, with dense clusters of fragrant white flowers at their bases. In its wild state it grows to the height of about 20 feet, but in cultivation it is kept down to 10 or 12 feet, for convenience in gathering the fruit. The tree is supposed to be indigenous in the regions south of Abyssinia, and was introduced into Arabia about the 16th century, into Ceylon and the East Indies in the 17th, and subsequently into Java, the West Indies, and South America.

3. A decoction made from the coffee-berry after it is roasted and ground: used as a beverage. 4. A luncheon at which coffee is drunk (compare TEA); also, the last course served at a dinner, consisting of coffee. [< Turk. qahwe, < Ar. qahwe, coffee.] cof'fet.

cog'i-tate, 1 koj'ı-tēt; 2 cŏğ'i-tāt, v. [-TAT'ED; -TAT'-ING.] I. t. 1. To turn over in the mind; think over; meditate. 2. To devise a plan or conception of; excogitate; as, to cogitate schemes of revenge.

II. i. To exercise the power of thinking; engage in continuous thought; reflect; think. [< L. cogitatus, pp. of cogito; see COGITABLE.] Syn.: see MUSE.

The Doctor's cogitating manner was attributable to his being always engaged in looking out for Greek roots.
DICKENS David Copperfield p. 37. [ʜ. & ʜ. 1871.]

cog"i-ta'tion, 1 koj'ı-tē'shən; 2 cŏğ'i-tā'shon, n. 1. The act or process of cogitating or of revolving or weighing in the mind; reflective thought; as, lost in cogitation. 2. That which is thought; a result of thinking; also, a plan; purpose; subject of thought. 3. Philos. Consciousness, especially as the power or faculty of thought. [F., < L. cogitatio(n-), < cogito; see COGITABLE.] Syn.: see REFLECTION.

cog'i-ta"tive,] 1 koj'ı-tē"tıv; 2 cŏğ'i-tā"tiv, a. 1. Capa-cog'i-ta"tiv²,] ble of or used in cogitation; reflective; as, the cogitative faculty. 2. Inclined to or characterized by thought; contemplative. [< LL. cogitativus, < L. cogitatus; see COGITATE.] — cog'i-ta-tiv(e-ly³, adv. Thoughtfully.— cog'i-ta-tiv'i-ty, n. [Rare.] Power of thought.

cog'i-ta"tor, 1 koj'ı-tē"tər or -tər; 2 cŏğ'i-tā"tor, n. One who cogitates.

cog'nac¹, 1 kō'nyak; 2 cō'nyăc, n. [F.] French brandy, especially that distilled at or near Cognac, from wine made in the valley of the Charente; any fine grape brandy. co'gnact. [department, France.

Co"gnac'², 1 ko"nyāk'; 2 co'nyăc', n. A town in Charente cog'nate, 1 keg'nēt; 2 cŏğ'nāt, a. 1. Allied by a common descent or parentage; connected by blood or birth; having the same ancestor or ancestors; kindred; as, the German and English are cognate races. 2. Allied by derivation from the same source; belonging to the same stock or root; as, English and Sanskrit are cognate languages.

A single error is never long insulated. Its cognate group is soon developed. AUSTIN PHELPS My Note-Book p. 45. [S. 1891.]

3. Allied in radical characteristics; having affinity of nature; akin. 4. Law. Of or pertaining to relationship traced exclusively through females: opposed to agnate, tho loosely applied to any form of blood-relationship. 5. Phon. Formed by a similar process of articulation, as the letters b, p, etc. [< L. cognatus, < co- (< cum), together + natus, pp. of nascor, be born.] Syn.: see KINDRED.— cognate accusative or objective (Gram.), the accusative or objective case of a noun, especially with intransitive verbs, naming the action of the verb governing it; as, in 'to live one's life," life is a cognate objective of live.— c. propositions (Logic), propositions having identical subjects or predicates.— cog'nate-ness, n. The state, quality, or relation of being cognate.

cog'nate, n. One that is cognate to another or others.

Those united by ties of blood through descent from the same married pair being called cognates, the agnates were those cognates who traced their connection exclusively through males.
J. F. MCLENNAN Studies in Anc. Hist. p. 188. [ɪɴ. c. 1876.]

cog-nat'ic, 1 keg-nat'ık; 2 cŏğ-năt'ic, a. Pertaining to or of the nature of blood-relationship; traced through cognates; especially, in law, pertaining to relationship through females. cog-nat'i-cal‡.

cog-na'tion, 1 keg-nē'shən; 2 cŏğ-nā'shon, n. 1. Kinship by descent from the same original; blood-relationship. 2. Law. Specif., relationship through the female line. 3. Relationship or affinity of any kind. [F., < L. cognatio(n-), < cognatus; see COGNATE.]

cog"ni-sa-bil'i-ty, etc. Same as COGNIZABILITY, etc.

cog-ni'tion, 1 keg-nish'ən; 2 cŏğ-nish'on, n. 1. The act of clearly and correctly apprehending fact or truth, whether mediately or immediately; knowledge, especially as gained by personal experience. 2. The power or faculty of knowing; cognitive faculty. (1) In Sir William Hamilton's scheme, the intellect in general.

I frequently employ cognition as a synonym of knowledge.
HAMILTON Lectures on Metaphysics xxi.

(2) The acquisitive power; the power by which the mind gains awareness of objects, whether of sense, consciousness, or intuition proper.

cog'ni-tive, } 1 keg'nı-tiv; 2 cŏg'ni-tĭv, a. Pertaining to cog'ni-tıve, } or having the power of cognition; knowing. [< L. cognitus, pp. of cognosco, know, < co- (< cum), together, + nosco, know.] cog-ni'tion-al‡.— the cognitive faculty. Psychol. 1. The intellect. See COGNITION. 2. The acquisitive or perceptive power; the first and fundamental power of intellect by which all simple and immediate knowledges are acquired. It includes (1) sense-perception, (2) consciousness, and (3) intuition proper. See KNOWLEDGE; PERCEPTION.

cog'ni-tor, 1 keg'nı-tor; 2 cŏg'ni-tôr, n. [L.] Rom. Law. A plaintiff's or defendant's personally chosen substitute in an action.

cog'ni-tum, 1 keg'nı-tum; 2 cŏg'ni-tŭm, n. [-TA, pl.] [L.] Any object of cognition. [L., neut. of cognitus; see COGNITIVE.] — primum cognitum, the thing first known in the order of learning.

cog'ni-za-ble, } 1 keg'nı-[or kən'ı-]zə-bl; 2 cŏg'ni-[or cog'ni-za-blı, } cŏn'ı-]za-bl, a. 1. That may be known or perceived; capable of being apprehended. 2. Law. Capable of being tried or examined before a designated tribunal; as, an offense cognizable before a justice. 3. Recognizable. [< OF. cognoisable, < conoistre, know, < L. cognosco; see COGNITIVE.] cog'ni-sa-bl(eғ‡.— cog"ni-za-bl(or-sa-)bl'ı-ty, cog'ni-za-bl(e-ness‡, n.— cog'ni-za-[or-sa-]blу, adv.

cog'ni-zance, 1 keg'nı-[or kən'ı-]zəns; 2 cŏg'ni-[or cŏn'ı-]zanç (XIII), n. 1. Apprehension or perception of fact; knowledge; notice; recognition. 2. Law. (1) Knowledge on which a judge acts without requiring proof; judicial notice, as of statutes or public events. (2) Jurisdiction; as, to take cognizance of a crime.

This court [of admiralty] hath cognizance of all crimes and offences committed . . . upon the sea.
BLACKSTONE Commentaries bk. iv, ch. 19, p. 268.

(3) Acknowledgment of a fine of lands and tenements; a confession. (4) The answer of a defendant in an action of replevin, where he acted as bailiff to another, and, while acknowledging the taking, insists that it was legal. 3. A distinctive device, badge, token, or mark worn to indicate family, party, etc.; in heraldry, a distinctive family mark borne on military equipments, etc., but not as a bearing. [< OF. cognoisance, < conoissant, ppr. of conoistre; see COGNIZABLE.] cog'ni-sancɛ‡.

cog'ni-zant, 1 keg'nı-[or kən'ı-]zənt; 2 cŏg'ni-[or cŏn'ı-]zant, a. 1. Taking notice; having knowledge or cognizance; apprehensive.

In the strict and proper sense, we are directly cognizant of no facts but facts of consciousness.
J. L. DIMAN Theistic Argument lect. ii, p. 39. [H. M. & CO. 1881.]

2. Law. Taking judicial notice or having jurisdiction (of a cause or a crime). [< OF. conoissant; see COGNIZANCE.] cog'ni-sant‡. Syn.: see AWARE.

cog'nize, 1 keg'naiz; 2 cŏg'nız, vt. [-NIZED; -NIZ-ING.] To know, perceive, or recognize; have a perception or cognition of. [< L. cognosco; see COGNITIVE.] cog'nisɛ‡.— cog'niz-er or -nis-er, n. Syn.: see KNOW.

Christianity cognizes God as not only above nature and the soul, but also as in nature and in the soul.
J. F. CLARKE Ten Great Religions p. 500. [O. & CO. 1871.]

cog"ni-zee', 1 keg"nı-zī'; 2 cŏg"ni-zē', n. Old Eng. Law. One who received the acknowledgment of a fine or feoffment of lands by a recognizance of record. cog"ni-see'‡.

cog'ni-zor, 1 keg'nı-zer; 2 cŏg'ni-zôr, n. Old Eng. Law. One who acknowledged a fine or feoffment of lands to another in a recognizance of record. cog'ni-sor‡.

cog-no'men 1 keg-nō'men; 2 cŏg-nō'mĕn, n. [-MENS or NOM'I-NA, pl.] 1. (1) Rom. Antiq. A name added to the nomen or gentile name of a Roman citizen, to denote the family or the gens to which he belonged; as, Caius Julius Cæsar. (2) In early Latin, an agnomen. 2. A surname; colloquially, any name, nickname, or appellation. [L., < co- (< cum), together, + nomen, name.] Syn.: see NAME.— cog-no'men, vt. [Rare.] To give a cognomen to; name; nickname. cog-nom'i-natɛ‡; cog-nom'i-nizɛ‡.— cog-nom'i-nal[1], a. Relating to or characteristic of a cognomen or surname.— cog-nom'i-nal[2]. I. a. Bearing the same name. cog-nom'i-nant‡; cog-nom'i-nous‡. II. n. One who bears the same name; a namesake.— cog-nom'i-nal-ly, adv.— cog-nom'i-nate, a. Having, serving as, or of the nature of a cognomen or surname; surnamed.— cog-nom"i-na'tion, n. A distinguishing appellation, cognomen, or surname, as in "William the Conqueror."— cog-nom'i-ne, adv. By cognomen or surname.— cog"no-min'i-ty, n. [Rare.] The having of the same name.

cog-nosce', 1 keg-nos'; 2 cŏg-nŏs', v. [-NOSCED'; -NOSC'-ING.] I. t. 1. Scots Law. (1) To hear or investigate judicially; adjudicate. (2) To examine and pronounce upon with regard to the mental or moral condition; hence, to declare (a person) to be idiotic or insane (non compos mentis). 2. To cognize.

II. i. To pass judgment; make examination; take cognizance; adjudicate. [< L. cognosco; see COGNITIVE.] — cog-nos'cence, n. [Rare.] Knowledge; cognizance.— cog-nos'cent, a.— cog-nos'ci-bl(eғ, a. Capable of being known, recognized, or ascertained; knowable.— cog-nos"ci-bil'ı-ty, n.— cog-nos'ci-tiv(e-lyˢ, adv.— cog-nos'ci-tiv(e-lyˢ, adv.

co"gno-scen'te, 1 kō"nyo-shen'tē; 2 cō"nyo-shĕn'tę, n. [-TI, 1 -tı; 2 -tē, pl.] [It.] A connoisseur. co"no-scen'tɛ‡.

cog-no'vit, 1 keg-nō'vıt; 2 cŏg-nō'vit, n. [L.] Literally, he has acknowledged; in law, a written confession by a defendant, acknowledging the plaintiff's demand to be just, and authorizing judgment to be entered.

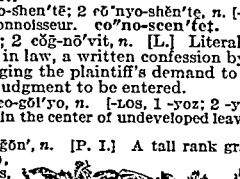
co-gon', 1 ko-gŏn'; 2 co-gŏn', n. [P. I.] A tall rank grass (Imperata arundinacea), plentiful in dry localities, used for fodder, and sometimes used for thatch.



Cogon Thatching, Philippine Islands.

co"go-nal', 1 kō'go-nŏl'; 2 cō'go-năl', n. [-NA'LES, 1 -nŏ'lēz; 2 -nă'lęs, pl.] [P. I.] An area covered with a growth of cogon.

co-gre'di-ent, 1 ko-grī'di-ent; 2 co-grē'di-ĕnt, a. Math. Designating the relation of two sets of variables which undergo linear transformation of a like kind. [< co-[1] + L. gradien(t-)s; see GRADIENT.] — co-gre'di-en-cy, n.

cog'ster, 1 keg'stər; 2 cŏg'ster, n. [Scot.] One who breaks flax with a swingle.

Cogs'well, 1 kogz'wel; 2 cŏgs'wĕl. Joseph Green (1786–1871). An American lawyer, scholar, librarian.

cog'way, 1 keg'wē; 2 cŏg'wā, n. A railroad-track with a cogged rail, usually in the center, for use on steep inclines.

co-hab'it, 1 ko-hab'ıt; 2 co-hăb'ıt, vi. 1. Law. To dwell together as husband and wife: popularly in the sense of having sexual intercourse. 2. [Archaic.] To inhabit together the same place or country. [< LL. cohabito, L. co- (< cum), together, + habito, dwell.] Syn.: see ACCOMPANY.— co-hab'i-tan-cy, n. Cohabitation.— co-hab'i-tant, n. A dweller with or in the same place with another. co-hab'ıt-er ‡.— co-hab"i-ta'tion, n. The act or state of cohabiting. [county, Mass.

co-heir', etc. See CO-[1], prefix.

Co'hen, 1 kō'hen; 2 cō'hĕn, n. [CO-HA'NIM, 1 ko-hā'nım; 2 co-hā'nim, pl.] [Heb.] One of the reputed descendants of the priestly caste in ancient Israel subject to certain privileges and disabilities.

co'hen-ite, 1 kō'en-ıt; 2 cō'ĕn-it, n. Mineral. A tin-white carbide of iron, nickel, and cobalt (Fe, NiCo)$_3$C, occurring in meteorites. [< E. Cohen, Germany.]

co-here', 1 ko-hır'; 2 co-hēr', vi. [CO-HERED'; CO-HER'-ING.] 1. To stick together; cleave to another; specif., to hold firmly together by cohesion, as particles.

The Germans have gathered themselves into an Empire whose parts are coming to cohere more and more perfectly.
BRYCE in Contemporary Review Jan., 1891, p. 18.

2. To be logically connected; be coherent, as the parts of an address. 3†. To fit; suit; agree. [< L. cohæreo, < co- (< cum), together, + hæreo, stick.] Syn.: see CLING.

co-her'ence, 1 ko-hır'ens; 2 co-hēr'ĕnç, n. 1. The act or condition of cohering with or together; a sticking to or a sticking together; union; conjunction.

There is no coherence of the farmers as a body — no trade-guild.
D. G. MITCHELL My Farm p. 255. [S. 1867.]

2. Unification under the same thought or principle; logical consistency; agreement.

The Essay on Man sins chiefly by want of central principle, and by want therefore of all coherency amongst the separate thoughts.
DE QUINCEY Essays on the Poets, Pope p. 168. [T. & F. 1859.]

co-her'ent, 1 ko-hır'ent; 2 co-hēr'ĕnt, a. 1. Cleaving or sticking together: said especially of particles of the same substance; manifesting cohesive attraction. 2. Logically connected; observing logical order and connection; consistent.

The only portions of a coherent drama that Goethe ever wrote are the Gretchen elements in Faust.
R. H. HUTTON Essays, Goethe in vol. ii, p. 39. [MACM. 1880.]

3. Suited; adapted; fitted. 4. Bot. Connate. [< L. cohæren(t-)s, ppr. of cohæreo; see COHERE.] — co-her"en-tif'ic, a. [Rare.] Producing coherence.— co-her'ent-ly, adv.

co-her'er, 1 ko-hır'er; 2 co-hēr'er, n. 1. Physics. A device for exhibiting or utilizing the phenomena of electrical coherence. When used as a receiver in wireless telegraphy it is a small glass tube about 2 inches long, fitted with twin silver plugs, separated by a slight interval, and holding between them several hundred minute fragments of nickel and silver, which under the action of an electric wave cohere and become good conductors, but by a slight shock are made to separate (or decohere), thus breaking the circuit. Compare DECOHERER. 2. Wireless Teleg. A device in which loose or imperfectly conducting contact between particles or pieces of metal is quickened in conductivity by the impact of electric radiation upon it; employed as the most sensitive of electric-wave detectors.

co-he'sion, 1 ko-hi'ʒən; 2 co-hē'zhon, n. 1. The act or condition of cohering; union; consistency. 2. Physics. That force by which molecules of the same kind or of the same body are held together, so that the body resists being pulled to pieces. It is strong in solids, weak in liquids, and probably absent in gases. The distinction between cohesion and adhesion, once insisted upon strongly, is not now generally regarded as fundamental. Some physicists have limited cohesion to particles of the same kind, others to those of the same body. Thus the force that holds the mica to the feldspar in granite would be called cohesion by some, and adhesion by others. 3. Bot. The congenital union of either similar or dissimilar parts, as the petals of a gamopetalous corolla or a calyx and an ovary. By some botanists, particularly English ones, the former of these only is called cohesion, and the latter adhesion. Compare ADNATION and COALESCENCE. [< L. cohæsus, pp. of cohæreo; see COHERE.]

co-he'sive, } 1 ko-hi'sıv; 2 cō-hē'sıv, a. Belonging to,

co-hib'it, 1 ko-hib'ıt; 2 co-hib'ıt, vt. [Rare.] To restrain or hinder.— co"hi-bi'tion, n. [Rare.] The act or cause of cohibiting, or state of being cohibited.— co-hib'i-tivɛ‡, a. — co-hib'i-tor, n. [Rare.] One who restrains.

Cohn'heim's areas, 1 kōn'hımz; 2 cōn'hĭms. Polygonal areas indicating the cut ends of muscle-columns, seen in cross-sections of striated muscle-fiber. [< J. Cohnheim, German physician.]

co'ho-bate, 1 kō'ho-bēt; 2 cō'ho-bāt, vt. [-BAT'ED; -BAT'ING.] In early chemistry, to redistil by restoring the distillate to the retort, to mingle again with the matter there. [< LL. cohobatus, pp. of cohobo, redistil.] — co"ho-ba'tion, n.— co'ho-ba"tor, n. One who cohobates, or the apparatus used in cohobating.

co-hoes', 1 ko-hōz'; 2 co-hōş', n. [Brit. Columbia.] A salmon.

Co-hoes', n. A city in Albany county, N. Y.

Co'horn, n. Same as COEHORN.

co'hort, 1 kō'hôrt; 2 cō'hôrt, n. 1. An armed band or body; especially (Rom. Antiq.), a body of 500 or 600 soldiers, containing three maniples and forming the tenth of a legion. 2. Biol. A classificatory group: in botany, next above an order; in zoology, usually above a family, but below an order. [< L. cohor(t-)s, company of soldiers.]

co-hor'ta-tivˢ, } Gram. Conveying or used in exhortation; hortatory: applied to a lengthened form of the future tense in Hebrew. II. n. The tense above mentioned; used almost exclusively in the first person singular. [< L. cohortatus, pp. of cohortor, encourage, < co- (< cum), with, + hortor, exhort.]

co'ho salm'on. Same as KISUTCH.

co-hosh', 1 ko-hŏsh'; 2 co-hŏsh', n. [Am. Ind.] Any one of several North-American herbs, sometimes used medicinally; especially, the papoose-root or blue cohosh (Caulophyllum thalictroides) and the black snakeroot or black cohosh (Cimicifuga racemosa); sometimes, the baneberry (Actæa spicata).

co'how, 1 kō'hau; 2 cō'how, n. [Bermuda.] The cahow. co'howɛ‡.

co"hue', 1 ko'ū'; 2 co'ū', n. [F.] A rabble; crowd.

co-hune', 1 ko-hūn'; 2 co-hųn', n. A wing-leaved palm (Attalea cohune) in Central America and South America, from which cohune-oil is obtained. See OIL. [< Honduras cahoun.] ca-houn'‡; co-hone'‡.

coif, 1 koif; 2 cŏif, vt. 1. To put a coif on; invest with or as with a coif. 2. [Rare.] To arrange or dress (the hair). — coifed, a.

coif, n. 1. [Archaic.] Any close-fitting cap, hood, or headdress. (1) A close-fitting hood or skull-cap for either sex, tied under the chin. (2) [Eng.] An inner skull-cap of lawn, formerly worn by sergeants at law; hence, the office or rank of a sergeant at law; the body of sergeants at law. (3) A thick skull-cap of stuff or leather, worn under the helmet; also, the camail or other head-armor.

Coif, as worn by Queen Isabella the Catholic.

2. The calyptra of mosses. [< F. coiffe, < LL. cofia, < MHG. kuffe, < OHG. chuph, head.] coiffe‡; quoiff.

coif-fette', 1 kwa-fet'; 2 cwă-fĕt', n. A small coif.

coif"feur', 1 kwa'fûr'; 2 cwă'fûr', n. [F.] A male hairdresser.

coif'fure, 1 koif'yur or (F.) kwa'fûr'; 2 cŏif'yur or (F.) cwă'fûr', n. [F.] 1. An arrangement or dressing of the hair.

European ladies would be startled at the fact that to perfect the coiffure of a man [in Africa] requires a period of from eight to ten years. BAKER Albert Nyanza ch. 5, p. 143. [MACM. 1866.]

2. A head-dress for women, generally of lace.

coiffed, pp. Coifed. S. S.

coign, 1 coin; 2 cŏin, n. 1. A projecting angle or stone; wedge; quoin; also, a corner or angle or an exposed position. 2. Geol. One of the four great projecting corners of the earth that, according to the tetrahedral hypothesis, have withstood the subsidence elsewhere undergone by the earth's surface during geologic times, as the Laurentian shield of Canada and the similar areas of ancient rocks in northern Europe and Manchuria. [= COIN[1], n., 4.] coignɛ‡.— coign of vantage, an advantageous position for survey, observation, or action.

coigne. [Ir.] I. vt. To quarter oneself with or upon another: a former practise of landlords, who quartered themselves upon their tenants. II. n. A quartering oneself on another. coign'yɛ‡; coyn'teɛ.

Coi"gny', 1 kwa'nyī'; 2 cwă'nyī', Duc de (1670–1759). François de Franquetot, a French marshal.

coil[1], 1 koil; 2 cŏil, v. I. t. 1. To wind spirally or in rings; wind round and round; as, to coil a rope; to coil a line. 2. To enwrap with coils, or to twine something around, as a lasso or the folds of a boa-constrictor. 3†. To gather up close. 4‡. To strain, as through a colander.

II. i. 1. To wind or twine around something, as a tendril. 2. To form rings or coils, or to move in spirals, as an eddy, a serpent, or a hawk. [< OF. coillir, < L. colligo, < col- (< cum), together, + lego, collect.] coil'er, n.— coil'ing-ma-chine", n. A mechanical appliance for bending and retaining steamed barrel-hoops in a circular form.

coil[3], vt. [Prov. Eng.] To pile in cocks, as hay.

coil[4], n. 1. A ring, a succession of rings, or a spiral, formed by winding or twining; as, a coil of rope.

Why sleeps the future, as a snake enrolled,
Coil within coil, at noon-tide.
WORDSWORTH Eccles. Sonnets pt. iii. sonnet xlvii.

coil[1], n. [Dial. or Archaic.] Confusion or tumult; bustle; hurly-burly.

coil[2], n. [Dial.] A cock of hay.

coil[4], n. [Scot.] A tool formerly used for boring coal.

Coins are of various metals — gold, silver, copper, nickel, and their alloys with each other — and are named from the value, the device, or the effigy stamped upon them. For list of coins that have been or are now current in the world, see table following.

It is in the series of consular or family coins, that we first find records of historical events and portraiture.

AKERMAN Ancient and Modern Coins § 4, p. 45. [S. R. S. 1848.]

2. Coined money collectively or in general.

The Constitution of the United States provides that no State shall make any thing but gold or silver coin a legal tender for the payment of debts. E. ATKINSON in The Forum Oct., 1891, p. 226.

3. Figuratively, recompense or reward, considered with reference to its specific kind.

In what coin shall we pay for this your goodness?

MORRIS Earthly Paradise, Wanderers prol., pt. i, st. 80.

4. Arch. A corner, angle, or the like. See QUOIN. 5. A die for stamping money, or the device stamped. 6†. A clock on a stocking. [F., < L. cuneus, wedge.]

coynt; coynet.— coin'less, a. Moneyless; penniless.

Syn.: see MONEY.

— coin'-as-sort"er, n. A device for separating coins of different sizes.— c.-catcher, n. A probang used in withdrawing a coin or like object from the windpipe.— c.-silver, n. [U. S.] The alloy of silver and copper which in the United States is accepted as the legal standard of fineness for the silver coinage. It contains 90 per cent. of silver and 10 per cent. of copper.— defaced c. (Law), coin stamped with unauthorized words or letters.— proof c. (Numis.), a coin for presentation, sample, or exhibition purposes, and not for circulation, struck from the ordinary die in some other metal than its face value warrants.— subsidiary c., coin of small denominations which is legal tender only to a limited amount.— to pay one back in his own c., to give to one treatment like that received from him.

The following table, revised by the Curator of the United States Mint, exhibits a list of the principal current or obsolete coins of the world, and others frequently met with in literature, with their approximate values. Of the current coins these values are assigned as nominal or average by reliable authorities, and are rendered into their English equivalents at $4.86½ to the sterling pound. Coins of very slight value are approximated at fractions of a cent, without going into decimal accuracy. When, as in Spanish-speaking countries, the national coinage is used in present or relinquished provincial or colonial possessions of the mother country, the variations in value, nearly always slight, are not in every case noted, nor are names of coins repeated, the accurate or approximate value of original issues often being nominally the same as those now in circulation. Where no value is given, the column of National Equivalents will refer to their value as fractions of larger coins, from which an estimate can be formed. Coins that may be termed self-denominating — as, in the United States, the five-dollar gold piece or half-eagle, etc., and, in England, the half-sovereign, etc.— are not given. Some words in vocabulary place are referred to COIN only to direct attention to the general and historic treatment of the word, and also for comparison. Authorities differ as to values and variants, hence occasional seeming discrepancies in the table, which really represent differences among reliable authorities.

Coins not mentioned by the best official and semi-official authorities are considered as practically out of circulation.

EXPLANATION OF THE PLATE OF COINS.

It is seldom possible to ascertain the exact date of an ancient coin. The dates here assigned represent approximately the periods within which the coins must have appeared.

1. Babylonic Stater, Lydia.
Electrum; 166.8 grains. About 700 B. C.
Reverse: An oblong incuse between two incuse squares.
This is the earliest coin known.

The Lydians are reputed to have been the first people to make stamped money. Electrum, consisting of three parts of gold and a native alloy of one part of silver, was used in the first period of the Lydian coinage. The weights of the coins conformed to the Babylonian silver standard. Afterward the Phenician silver standard was used concurrently with the Babylonian, probably for the sea-trade with the western coast-towns. When Crœsus abandoned electrum, he produced, by reducing the Phenician weight one fourth, a gold coin weighing exactly a gold stater, and by a similar reduction of the Babylonian weight he obtained the Greek gold stater of Eubœa.

2. Didrachm of Ægina.
Silver; 192 grains. 700–480 B. C.
Obverse: A sea-tortoise (the symbol of Astarte, the Phenician goddess of trade). Earliest known silver coin.
Reverse: An incuse square, divided into eight compartments.

According to the Parian chronicle, Phidon, king of Argos, established the earliest Greek mint, in the island of Ægina. The Æginetan silver coinage is almost as ancient as the electrum coinage of Lydia. The Greeks introduced engraved dies in place of the rude punches of the Lydians.

3. Coin of Caulonia.
Obverse: KAYA (Caulonia). Apollo naked, holding in his raised right hand a branch, on his outstretched left arm a small running figure with winged feet, and in the left hand a branch; in front, a stag looking back.
Reverse: Same type of incuse, with small figure wanting.

An incuse coin of very ancient date. Caulonia in Brutium was one of the earliest colonies established by the Greeks on the shores of southern Italy.

4. Stater of Halicarnassus.
Electrum; 216.3 grains. 700–480 B. C.
Obverse: ΦΑΝΟΣ ΕΜΙ ΣΗΜΑ ("I am the sign of Phanes"). A stag feeding.
Reverse: An oblong incuse between two incuse squares.

The earliest known inscribed coin, struck probably about 500 B. C. by Phanes, a vassal of Egypt, who joined Cambyses, king of Persia, in his invasion of that country, or possibly at an earlier date by an ancestor of this Phanes.

5. Syracusan Medallion.
Silver; 263.6 grains. 485–478 B. C.
Obverse: ΣΥΡΑΚΟΣΙΟΝ ("of the Syracusans"). Head of the nymph Arethusa surrounded by four dolphins.
Reverse: A quadriga, with Nike alighting upon the yoke: commemorating the Olympian victory of King Gelon.

The coinage of Syracuse, while lacking the artistic vigor of the coins of Asia Minor and the noble simplicity of Greece, was the richest in design and the most delicately executed of the Greek moneys. Agonistic subjects were commonly chosen for the types. Gelon, tyrant of Gela, won the chariot-race at Olympia in 488 B. C.

6. Lepton (?), Palestine.
Copper; the widow's mite. Luke xxi, 2.
This coin has been termed lepton on the authority of Theophylact and of Mr. Du Bois, for many years director of the United States Mint, Philadelphia.
Obverse: יהונתן המלך ("Jonathan the king"). Within the intermediate spaces of the sun with eight rays.
Reverse: ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ ("of King Alexander"). Round an anchor.

This was the smallest Jewish coin in circulation in Jerusalem, worth intrinsically perhaps not more than a mill in United States money. The people were forbidden to bring into the temple coins that were not Jewish. Small bronze pieces were struck, many of them over other coins, by Alexander Jannæus, king of the Jews (104–78 B. C.).

7. Tetradrachm of Ephesus.
Silver; 234 grains. 400–336 B. C.
Obverse: EΦ ("of the Ephesians").
Reverse: ΑΡΙΣΤΟΔΗΜΟΣ ("Aristodemus"). The fore part of a stag and a date-palm.

This is an example of the Ephesian coinage between the peace of Antalcidas and the time of Lysimachus. The only subjects treated on the rudely executed coins of Ephesus refer to the worship of the Ephesian Diana, an Asiatic goddess identified by the Greeks with Artemis, the essentially different. Both the stag and the bee are her symbols.

8. Stater of Amphipolis.
Silver; 220.5 grains. 400–336 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Apollo, facing.
Reverse: ΑΜΦΙΠΟΛΙΤΕΩΝ ("of the Amphipolitans"). A racing-torch.

The silver coins of this Thracian city, founded as an Athenian colony in 437 B. C., are remarkable for intensity of expression of the face.

9. Coin of Argos.
Silver; 184 grains. 400–336 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Hera, wearing stephanos adorned with flowers, earring, and necklace.
Reverse: ΑΡΓΕΙΩΝ ("of the Argives"). A wolf between two dolphins.

This head of Hera is copied from the famous statue of that goddess by Polycletus at Argos. The wolf is the emblem of the Lycian Apollo, symbolizing winter slain by the god of warmth and light. The dolphins, emblems of the Delphinian Apollo, symbolize the calming of the wintry sea and resumption of navigation.

10. Stater of Corinth.
Silver; 132.5 grains. 400–336 B. C.
Obverse: Pegasus flying; beneath, the letter Koppa (the initial of the city's name).
Reverse: Head of Pallas; behind, an acanthus.

The antique Koppa was retained as a distinguishing mark of the coinage of Corinth, which, in the 5th and 4th centuries B. C., had a circulation second only to that of Athens. The head of Athena on these coins is always represented with a Corinthian helmet.

11. Persian Daric.
Gold; 129 grains. 521–485 B. C.
Obverse: A crowned archer, holding bow and spear (the royal symbol of Persia).

The earliest form of this coin, struck in the reign of Darius I.

12. Rhodian Stater.
Gold; 132.6 grains. 400–336 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Helios, facing, his hair arranged in locks suggestive of rays.
Reverse: ΡΟΔΙΟΝ ("of the Rhodians"). A rose with a bud and a spray of vine with grapes, the whole in an incuse square.

The rose borne on the coins of Rhodes is a speaking type, expressing the name of the city. This and the head of Helios are almost the only types used. The head has a peculiar grandeur on the Rhodian coins, especially on this, one of the finest of all Greek coins.

13. Macedonian Double Stater.
Gold; 264 grains. 336–323 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Pallas.
Reverse: ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ ("of Alexander"). Nike, holding a wreath and a tropæum.

This coin is probably from one of the European mints, and was struck during the lifetime of Alexander.

14. Tetradrachm of Thurium.
Silver; 244.1 grains. 400–336 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Pallas, wearing a crested Athenian helmet, on which is Scylla, with dogs' heads springing from her waist; on the neck-piece, a griffin.
Reverse: ΘΟΥΡΙΩΝ ("of the Thurians"). A butting bull; in exergue, a fish (the tunny).

This is a magnificent specimen of the engraver's art. Thurium, founded by the Athenians near the site of Sybaris, may have borrowed the device of the bull from the coin of the more ancient town.

15. Decadrachm of Syracuse.
Silver; 660.9 grains. 400–336 B. C.
Obverse: ΣΥΡΑΚΟΣΙΩΝ ("of the Syracusans"). Head of Persephone, wearing a wreath of grain and surrounded by dolphins; beneath, EYAINE (standing for Evænetus, the name of the artist).
Reverse: A victorious quadriga; in exergue, armor and the word ΑΘΛΑ ("prizes").

These coins, issued by Dionysius, mark the acme of realistic art and artistic refinement in coin-engraving, of which Evænetus was one of the greatest masters of all ages.

16. Carthaginian Stater.
Silver; 265 grains. 400–336 B. C.
Obverse: Head of a female (perhaps Dido or the moon-goddess), wearing a tiara of Phrygian form.
Reverse: A lion and a palm-tree; in exergue, a Punic inscription signifying "of the people of the camp."

This is the work of a Greek engraver, and excels all other Carthaginian coins that have been preserved. When the fugitive Phenicians, shipwrecked on the African coast with their queen, Dido, were digging the foundations of the city that was to be their future home, they came upon a palm-tree branch and a horse's head, which were taken to be good omens and were subsequently adopted as monetary types.

17. Carthaginian Dodecadrachm.
Silver; 700 grains. 280–190 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Persephone.

This type is executed in a debased and exaggerated style, very different from the purer art of the earlier period.

18. Roman Denarius.
Silver; 66.7 grains. 280–190 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Roma, wearing the winged helmet; behind, X (signifying 10 asses).
Reverse: ROMA (Rome) (in incused letters). The Dioscuri, represented as charging at the battle of Lake Regillus.

This piece belongs to the earliest period of the Roman silver coinage, the first issue of which was struck in 269 B. C.

19. Coin of Selinus.
Silver; 269 grains. 480–400 B. C.
Obverse: ΣΕΛΙΝΟΣ. Selinus, the tutelary river-god, sacrificing at an altar, before which is a cock; in his left hand, the lustral branch; behind, a selinon- or parsley-leaf and a bull's image on a pedestal.
Reverse: ΣΕΛΙΝΟΝΤΙΟΝ ("of the Selinuntines"). Apollo and Artemis in a quadriga, Apollo shooting arrows.

The river-god is engaged in an Esculapian libation, as is shown by the cock, and the design symbolizes the draining of a marsh, whereby the city was relieved of a plague sent by Apollo, which is referred to by the type of the reverse. The selinon-leaf is a striking emblem of the town, which took its name from this plant, an abundant product of its fertile soil.

20. Egyptian Pentadrachm.
Gold; 228.2 grains. 306–284 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Ptolemy I., diademed and with an egis.
Reverse: ΠΤΟΛΕΜΑΙΟΥ ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ("of King Ptolemy"). An eagle on a thunderbolt.

Ptolemy Soter, who assumed the title of king in 306, struck coins in Cyprus, Cyrenaica, and other parts besides Egypt. He laid the foundation of the Alexandrian library.

21. Roman Victoriatus.
Silver; 44.5 grains. 280–190 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Jupiter.
Reverse: ROMA. Victory crowning a trophy; between them, a sow (the moneyer's mark).

The victoriatus was at first a coin of Campania; but after the fall of Capua (211 B. C.) it was minted at Rome and became current in the provinces.

22. Tetradrachm of Lysimachus.
Silver; 262 grains. 336–280 B. C.
Obverse: Head of the deified Alexander, with the horn of Ammon.

This is one of the coins struck by Lysimachus, king of Macedon. The head of Alexander is probably copied from the bronze statue by Lysippus or from a gem-portrait by Pyrgoteles. Lysippus was the only sculptor permitted to make statues of Alexander, Pyrgoteles had the exclusive privilege of engraving him, and the conqueror himself said that Apelles alone should paint him.

23. Macedonian Coin.
Silver; 259.5 grains. 179–168 B. C.
Obverse: Head of King Perseus; beneath, ΖΩΙΛΟΥ ("of Zoilus").

This is a striking portrait of the last Greek king of Macedon. Zoilus was probably director of mints.

24. Roman Sestertius.
Silver; 16.5 grains. 280–190 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Roma; behind, IIS (2 asses and a semis).
Reverse: The Dioscuri.

After the introduction of silver coinage at Rome (269 B. C.) the issue of gold and silver money was forbidden to all the subjected provinces of Italy.

25. Roman Quinarius.
Silver; 34.5 grains. 280–190 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Roma, wearing the winged helmet; behind head, V (5 asses).
Reverse: ROMA (incuse letters). The Dioscuri charging.

The ideal head personifying the city gave place in a later period to actual portraits of historical personages.

26. Coin of Cnossus, Crete.
Silver; 257.5 grains. 190–100 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Minos, with royal diadem.
Reverse: ΚΝΩΣΙΩΝ ("of the People of Cnossus"). A square labyrinth.

Minos was the reputed founder of the city, and on its coins the labyrinth is nearly always represented. The local types of the Cretan coinage were retained under the Macedonian empire and in the later coins of debased Attic style, of which this is an example.

27. Egyptian Octadrachm.
Gold; 429 grains. 285–247 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Arsinoe II., sister and second wife of Ptolemy Philadelphus II.
Reverse: ΑΡΣΙΝΟΗΣ ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦΟΥ ("of Arsinoe, wife of Philadelphus"). Double cornucopia.

This is one of a series of magnificent gold coins bearing authentic portraits of the reigning sovereigns, and not the traditional portrait of the founder of the dynasty represented on the silver money.

28. Tetradrachm of Smyrna.
Silver; 254 grains. 190–133 B. C.
Obverse: Head with turreted crown.
Reverse: ΣΜΥΡΝΑΙΩΝ ("of the people of Smyrna"), in a wreath of oak-leaves.

The turreted head may be a personification of the town.

29. Tetradrachm of Athens.
Silver; 265 grains. 480–400 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Athena.
Reverse: ΑΘΕ ("of Athens"). Owl and olive-branch.

This is an archaistic coin. This copy of the archaic style was maintained because any alteration in the appearance of the Athenian coins, which had a very wide circulation and covered a long period of time, might have damaged their credit. The wreath of olives alludes to the widely celebrated excellence and value of the oil of the Athenian olive-groves.

30. Shekel of Jerusalem.
Silver; 220 grains. 143–135 B. C.
Reverse: ירושלים הקדושה ("Jerusalem the holy").
A triple lily. "I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily." Hosea xiv, 5.

The right to coin money was conferred by Antiochus VII. (138–129 B. C.) on Simon Maccabæus, the brother of Judas, high priest and prince of the Jews. The type on the reverse is supposed to represent either Aaron's rod budding or a native lily. The chalice on the obverse of these coins is usually called the pot of manna. The shekel with which Abraham bought the cave of Machpelah was a weight, and in the book of Job is called kestîah (a lamb), the weight, perhaps, being so shaped.

31. Roman Coin.
Gold; 120 grains. 2 B. C.
Obverse: CAESAR AVGVSTVS DIVI F. PATER PATRIAE ("Cæsar Augustus, son of the god, father of his country"). Head of Augustus, laureate.
Reverse: C. L. CAESARES. AVGVSTI F. COS. DESIG. PRINC. IVVENT ("Caius and Lucius Cæsar, sons of Augustus, consuls elect, princes of the youth"). Caius and Lucius, each clad in toga and holding a shield and spear; in the field, a simpulum and an augur's staff.

Caius and Lucius, sons of his daughter Julia, were chosen by Augustus as his heirs, but both died before his own death.

32. Roman Aureus.
Gold; 123 grains. About 27 B. C.
Obverse: CAESAR. Head of Augustus.

An aureus of Julius Cæsar weighed 123 grains, exactly the weight of an English sovereign. An aureus of Augustus that weighed 540 grains was found at Herculaneum. The fee of a lawyer was a hundred aurei. By the Justinian code it was allowed to risk only one aureus at dice.

33. Coin of Antioch (?).
Silver; 221 grains. 52–30 B. C.
Obverse: ΒΑΣΙΛΙΣΣΑ ΚΛΕΟΠΑΤΡΑ ΘΕΑ ΝΕΩΤΕΡΑ ("Queen Cleopatra, a later goddess"). Bust of Cleopatra, diademed. This is the celebrated Cleopatra.
Reverse: ΑΝΤΟΝΙΟΣ ΑΥΤΟΚΡΑΤΩΡ ΤΡΙΤΟΝ ΤΡΙΩΝ ΑΝΔΡΩΝ ("Antonius Imperator for the third time, triumvir"). Head of Mark Antony.

34. Bactrian Coin.
Silver; 261.2 grains. About 180–150 B. C.
Obverse: Bust of the king, with helmet of unusual shape.
Reverse: ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΜΕΓΑΛΟΥ ΕΥΚΡΑΤΙΔΟΥ ("of the great King Eucratides"). The Dioscuri on horseback.

The coins of this king have been found in great abundance, an evidence of his vast wealth. He greatly extended the territory of the Græco-Bactrian princes, and from this fact was called "the lord of a thousand cities."

35. Tetrobol of Pergamus.
Silver; 44 grains. 190–100 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Pallas, wearing a crested helmet.
Reverse: A palladium.

36. Roman Coin.
Gold; 123 grains. About 43–42 B. C.
Obverse: BRVTVS IMP. ("Brutus Imperator"). Head of Brutus, the whole in a laurel wreath.
Reverse: CASCA LONGVS. A trophy between the prows of two ships.

Casca Longus was another name of Publius Servilius Casca, who struck the first blow at Cæsar.

See what a rent the envious Casca made.
SHAKESPEARE Julius Cæsar act iii, sc. 2.

The trophy commemorates a naval victory gained by the lieutenants of Brutus and Cassius over the fleet of the triumvirs, at the very time the conspirators themselves were being defeated on land.

coin'age, 1 kein'ɪj; 2 cŏin'aġ, n. 1. The making of coins for use as money, or the money so made; also, the system of coins used in a country.

The first coinage of the United States was silver half-dimes, in October, 1792, of which Washington makes mention in his address to Congress, on November 6, 1792, as follows: 'There has been a small beginning in the coinage of half-dimes, the want of small coins in circulation, calling the first attention to them.' EVANS Hist. of U. S. Mint p. 14. [AUTHOR 1886.]

The first metal purchased for coinage by the U. S. mint was six pounds of copper, which was coined and delivered to the Treasury in 1793. The first return of silver coins was made Oct. 15, 1794, and the first gold coinage consisted of 744 half-eagles delivered July 31, 1795. The first delivery of eagles was made Sept. 22, 1795, and amounted to 400.

col'lege, 1 kol'ıj; 2 cŏl'ĕg, n. 1. [U. S., Canada, & Scot.] An incorporated institution in which advanced courses of instruction are given. Specifically: (1) A school for instruction in the liberal arts, having a course of study either fixed or partly fixed and partly elective, commonly requiring four years for completion. The regular course of the typical college consists of the English, Latin, and Greek languages, mathematics, the moral and mental sciences, physics and other departments of natural science, and in recent years French or German, or both. The college has a right to confer various degrees. See DEGREE. Some American colleges include professional schools as departments. In others, where the corporation has the title of university, the term college is officially restricted to the academic department, called also the college proper. In some instances there is no sharp distinction between the university and the college. The entrance requirements vary from those of certain Western and Southern colleges, which closely resemble the modern high school, to those of the larger institutions, such as Columbia, Harvard, Princeton, and Yale, where a four-year classical high-school course is the necessary preparation. See UNIVERSITY. Formerly most colleges had a fixed classical curriculum which led to a Bachelor of Arts degree, but at present the elective system enables a student to take a non-classical or scientific course, and engage in postgraduate work in the senior year, while frequently the complete course may be taken in less than four years.

(2) A school for instruction preparatory to professional life; as, a theological college; a medical college. In the United States theological schools are oftener called seminaries. (3) A school for preparation for any technical or artistic pursuit; as, a college of music; a college of agriculture. 2. [Eng. & Ir.] (1) Any one of the educational institutions that together constitute a university; originally, a society of scholars, incorporated for study and instruction (compare def. 5); as, King's College, Cambridge; Magdalen College, Oxford.

About the middle of the thirteenth century, . . . the universities began to assume a new form, by the erection of colleges for the residence of their members as separate communities. CRAIK Eng. Lit. and Lang., Universities in vol. i, p. 168. [s. 1864.]

(2) Any similar institution that may be affiliated under a university control, tho not in a university town; as, Hartley College, Southampton. Each of these colleges has buildings, foundation, and faculty of its own, but its students take university examinations and receive degrees from the university authority. In England also, as in the United States, technical and professional schools, and even the military and the naval schools, are sometimes called colleges.

(3) An institution of advanced preparatory rank; as, Eton College; Winchester College. 3. In France, a public school of secondary instruction, similar to a lyceum, but differing from it in being supported by a municipality and not by the general government. 4. The buildings or collection of buildings owned and used by a college. 5. A body of associates or colleagues; as, the ancient college of augurs; the electoral college. 6. A course of lectures or studies. 7. [Slang.] A prison. 8. Any assemblage or gathering; as, a college of bees. 9. A charitable foundation, hospital, or asylum. 10. [Rare.] A clerical community living on a foundation. col'li-ques'cence, 1 kel'ɪ-kwes'ens; 2 cŏl'i-kwĕs'ĕnç, n. Same as LIQUESCENCE.

col-li'sion, 1 ke-liz'ən; 2 cŏ-lizh'on, n. 1. The act of colliding; condition of having collided; a striking together; violent contact, as of trains or steamships.

The coldest bodies warm with opposition, the hardest sparkle in collision. JUNIUS Letters vol. i, p. 205. [S. M. 1851.]

2. [Rare.] Figuratively, the clashing of adverse views or of opposite interests; antagonism; opposition. 3†. Synalepha. [< LL. collisio(n-), < L. collisus, pp. of collido; see COLLIDE.] Syn.: clash, clashing, concussion, conflict, contact, encounter, impact, meeting, opposition, shock. Collision is the result of motion or action, and is sudden and momentary; contact may be a condition of rest, and be continuous and permanent. Concussion is often by transmitted force rather than by direct impact; two railway-trains came into collision; an explosion of dynamite shatters neighboring windows by concussion. Impact is the blow given by the striking body; as, the impact of the cannon-shot upon the target. An encounter is always violent, and generally hostile. Meeting is neutral, and may be of the dearest friends or of the bitterest foes; of objects, of persons, or of opinions; of two or of a multitude. Shock is the result of collision. In the figurative use, we speak of clashing of views, collision of persons. Opposition is used chiefly of persons, more rarely of opinions or interests; conflict is used indifferently of all. — Ant.: agreement, amity, coincidence, concert, concord, concurrence, conformity, harmony, unison, unity. — Prep.: collision of one object with another; of or between opposing objects.

— collision and damage (Law), an admiralty suit for damages brought about by a collision between vessels.

col-li'sion-al, 1 ko-liz'ən-əl; 2 cŏ-lizh'on-al, a. Of the nature of or pertaining to a collision; colliding.

col-li'sive, } 1 ke-lai'sɪv; 2 cŏ-li'siv, a. [Rare.] Causing col-li'sive[5], } collision; colliding or clashing.

col-lo'cal, 1 ko-lō'kəl; 2 cŏ-lō'cal, a. Of the same locality.

col'lo-cate, 1 kel'o-kēt; 2 cŏl'o-cāt, vt. [-CAT'ED; -CAT'ING.] To put or arrange together; station. [< L. collocatus, pp. of colloco, < col- (< cum), together; and see LOCATE.]

col'lo-catet, a. Set or placed together.

col'lo-ca'tion, 1 kel'o-kē'shən; 2 cŏl'o-cā'shon, n. A setting or placing together or in relation; also, the condition of being so placed; arrangement, as of words in a sentence; as, "all languages use greater freedom of collocation in poetry than in prose." J. EARLE Philology of Eng. Tongue § 630. [CL. P. 1892.]

— collocations of matter (Phys. Astron.), features of the universe that depend on unexplained initial conditions and not on dynamic laws. — col"lo-ca'tion-a-bl(e[s], a. Civil Law. Subject to collocation. — col"lo-ca'tion-al, a. — col'lo-ca-tiv(e[s], a. Placing in mutual order or juxtaposition. col'lo-ca-to-ry†.

col"lo-chro'mate, 1 kel'o-krō'mēt; 2 cŏl'o-crō'māt, a. Of or pertaining to the method of making collotypes. [< Gr. kolla, glue, + CHROMATE.]

col'lock, 1 kel'ək; 2 cŏl'ok, n. [Prov. Eng.] A large pail.

col"lo-cu'tion, 1 kel'o-kiū'shən; 2 cŏl'o-cū'shon, n. [Rare.] A speaking together; conference; colloquy.

col-loc'u-tor, 1 ke-lok'yu-tər or -tor; 2 cŏ-lŏc'yu-tor, n. [Rare.] A speaker in a conversation or colloquy. — col-loc'u-to-ry, a. Relating to or consisting of conversation or colloquy.

Col"lo-da'ri-a, 1 kel'o-dē'rɪ-ə; 2 cŏl'o-dā'ri-a, n. pl. Protoz. A suborder of spumellarians with the skeleton obsolete or absent. [< Gr. kollōdēs, glue-like, < kolla, glue, + eidos; see -OID.] — col"lo-da'ri-an, a. & n.

col-lo"di-o-chlo'rid, a. Phot. Designating an emulsion of silver chlorid (AgCl) in collodion.

col-lo"di-o-gel'a-tin, a. Phot. Characterizing a method of perfecting a film by immersing it in a solution as of gelatin, casein, etc., after having washed it with an emulsion of collodion, or by washing a plate with hot water and coating it with a rapid emulsion of gelatin.

col-lo'di-on, 1 ko-lō'dɪ-ən; 2 cŏ-lō'di-on, n. A solution of guncotton in ether and alcohol. It is deposited as a film on the evaporation of the ether, and is used as a coating for wounds and for photographic plates. Collodion is sometimes chemically treated as with albumin in solution (albuminized collodion); with cantharides for blistering (blistering c.); with mercuric chlorid (caustic c.), or with methyl alcohol (methylic c.) for use in medicine or the arts. [< Gr. kollōdēs; see COLLODARIA.] col-lo'di-umt. — collodion process, a photographic process in which the plate is coated with sensitized collodion. The name is commonly applied to the wet process, tho some dry plates also are made with collodion. — c.-sac method, a process for cultivating bacteria in sacs of collodion which are put into animal peritoneal cavities. — c. transfer, a photograph taken on a collodion film on glass that may be transferred to paper. — enamel c. (Phot.), a non-sensitized collodion used as a substitute for varnish. — flexible c., a fine, soft, elastic mass consisting of Canada turpentine, collodion after the ether has been evaporated, and castor-oil. — styptic c., collodion in which an astringent, as tannin, is dissolved: used as a dressing for wounds. — col-lo'di-on-ize, vt. To treat with collodion, as a photographic plate. — col-lo'di-o-type, n. A photograph made by the collodion process; also, the process.

col-loge', vt. Same as COLLOGUE.

col'lo-gen, etc. Same as COLLAGEN, etc.

col"lo-go-nid'i-um, 1 kel'o-go-nid'ɪ-əm; 2 cŏl'o-gō-nid'i-ŭm, n. [-I-A, pl.] Bot. A bluish-green collemoid gonidium; a gonimium. [< Gr. kolla, glue, + GONIDIUM.]

col'lo-graph, } 1 kel'o-graf; 2 cŏl'o-grăf, n. 1. A mani-col'lo-graf[2], } fold copying-machine in which the transfer is effected by bringing a film of bichromated gelatin in contact with writing made with a solution of ferrous salts or tannin. 2. A collotype. [< Gr. kolla, glue, + -GRAPH.] — col"lo-graph'ic, a. — col-log'ra-phy, n.

col-logue', 1 ko-lōg'; 2 cŏ-lōg', v. I. i. To converse; hold a colloquy. 2. To confer secretly, especially with mischievous intent; collude. 3†. To use flattery and deceit. II†. t. To flatter; wheedle. [< L. colloquor, speak together; influenced by COLLEAGUE.] col-loague't.

col'loid, 1 kel'oid; 2 cŏl'oid, a. 1. Resembling jelly or glue. 2. Chem. Specifically, uncrystalline, semi-solid, and capable of but slow diffusion, or of penetrating membranes but slowly; colloidal. Compare CRYSTALLOID. 3. Geol. Partly amorphous, as certain minerals. [< Gr. kollōdēs, < kolla, glue; and see -OID.] colloid degeneration, a morbid change of the albuminous constituents of cells into a jelly-like substance. — c. styptic, a fluid compound applied to wounds, styptic, antiseptic, and air-excluding in its effect; xylostyptic ether. — c. substance (Pathol.), a firm, clear, jelly-like substance arising from colloid degeneration.

col'loid, n. 1. Pathol. A colloid substance, as a certain form of cancer. 2. Chem. A colloid compound or substance. See COLLOID, a., 2.

Solutions of colloids in solvents such as water and alcohol seem to be divisible into two classes. Both mix with warm water in all proportions, and will solidify in certain conditions. One class, represented by gelatin, will redissolve on warming or diluting, while the other class, containing such substances as silica, albumen, and metallic hydrosulfids, will solidify on heating or on the addition of electrolytes to form a solid "gel" which cannot be redissolved. Solidification of the first kind may be termed "setting," that of the second "coagulation."

Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. XXV, p. 377.

col-loi'dal, 1 ke-loi'dəl; 2 cŏ-lŏi'dal, a. Of or pertaining to a colloid. — colloidal metals, metallic elements, as silver, gold, mercury, which can exist in a state of subdivision in which the metals become suspended or dissolved in water. The colors of such solutions or mixtures often differ from those of the metals under ordinary conditions. — col'loi-dal'i-ty, n.

Col-loi'de-a, 1 ke-loi'dɪ-ə; 2 cŏ-lŏi'de-a, n. pl. Protoz. A suborder of collodarian radiolarians with the skeleton entirely wanting. [< Gr. kollōdēs; see COLLODARIA.] — col-loi'de-an, a. & n.

col'loid-ize, 1 kel'oid-aiz; 2 cŏl'oid-ĭz, vt. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] To render (a substance) colloidal or jelly-like in consistency; especially applied in the making of pyroxylin plastics, smokeless powder, and explosive gelatin, by treating a cellulose nitrate with a solvent.

col'lo-loi'lo, 1 kel'o-loi'o; 2 cŏl'o-lŏi'o, n. An edible climbing variety of African yam.

col'lo-ne'ma, 1 kel'o-nī'mə; 2 cŏl'o-nē'ma, n. Same as MYXOMA. [< Gr. kolla, glue, + nēma, thread.]

col'lo-ny†, n. Same as COLONY.

col'lop[1], 1 kel'əp; 2 cŏl'op, n. 1. A piece of meat, as a slice or morsel for stewing; especially, a slice of bacon; formerly, any piece of meat.

Our landlady . . . very soon began to prepare for us, in the frying pan, a savoury mess of venison collops.

SCOTT Rob Roy ch. 23, p. 278. [S. 1873.]

2. A small portion of anything. 3. [Dial.] A thick fold of flesh on the body. [Cp. Sw. kollops, slices of meat stewed; G. klops, meat made tender by beating.] colpt. — collop cake [Dial., Eng.], a layer cake containing slices of ham or bacon. — C. Monday, the first day of the Lenten fast. — collop-tongs, n. [Prov. Brit.] Tongs used in roasting collops of meat. — Scotch collops, stewed chopped beefsteak.

col'lop[2], n. [Ir.] 1. Pasture for a beast for a year or something equal to it in value. 2. As many animals as can feed in an Irish acre. 3. A two-year old heifer. 4. The handle of a flail. [< Ir. colpa.] col'pach†.

col'loped, 1 kel'ept; 2 cŏl'opt, a. Having folds of fat or flesh.

col-loph'a-nite, 1 ke-lof'ə-nait; 2 cŏ-lŏf'a-nīt, n. Mineral. A dull amorphous whitish hydrous calcium phosphate ($Ca_2P_2O_8 + H_2O$). [< Gr. kolla, glue, + phainō, show.]

col'lo-phore, 1 kel'o-fōr; 2 cŏl'o-fōr, n. Entom. A sucker-like organ extending from the under side of the abdomen in podurans. [< Gr. kolla, glue, + pherō, bear.]

colloq., abbr. See ABBREVIATION.

col-loque't, vt. To confer with. — col"loque', n. Same as COLLOQUY, n., 3.

col-lo'qui-al, 1 ke-lō'kwɪ-əl; 2 cŏ-lō'kwi-al, a. 1. Pertaining or peculiar to common speech as distinguished from literary; as, a colloquial phrase.

The pure racy idiom of colloquial or household English . . . must be looked for in the circles of well-educated women.

DE QUINCEY Literary Criticism, Style p. 190. [S. M. & CO. 1881.]

2. Of or pertaining to conversation [< L. colloquium; see COLLOQUY.] — col-lo'qui-al-ist, n. One who uses colloquialisms; also, a good or ready talker. — col-lo"qui-al'i-ty, n. Colloquial quality. col-lo'qui-al-ness†. — col-lo'qui-al-ize or -ise, vt. To make colloquial. — col-lo'qui-al-ly, adv.

col-lo'qui-al-ism, 1 ke-lō'kwɪ-əl-izm; 2 cŏ-lō'kwi-al-ĭsm, n. A colloquial expression, or form of speech used only or chiefly in conversation: often a barbarism. See SLANG. Syn.: see SLANG.

Mr. Lowell demonstrates that many of the words and expressions which we are accustomed to regard as vulgar colloquialisms are really good and pure English.

Edinburgh Review Oct., 1891, p. 400.

col-lo'qui-um, 1 ke-lō'kwɪ-um; 2 cŏ-lō'kwi-ŭm, n. [-QUI-A, pl.] [L.] 1. Law. In an action for slander, the allegation, of the speaking of the slanderous words. 2. A thesis or exercise in the form of a discussion. 3†. A colloquy.

col'lo-quize, 1 kel'o-kwaiz; 2 cŏl'o-kwĭz, ri. [-QUIZED; -QUIZ'ING.] To engage in a colloquy; converse. — col'loquist, n.

col'lo-quy, 1 kel'o-kwɪ; 2 cŏl'o-kwy, n. [-QUIES, 1 -kwiz; 2 -kwiş, pl.] 1. An informal conference or discussion between two or more persons; conversation; dialog. 2. A colloquium. 3. Ch. Hist. A classis or presbytery: a term formerly used in the Reformed Genevan or Presbyterian Church. [< L. colloquium, < colloquor, speak together, < col- (< cum), together, + loquor, speak.]

Syn.: see CONVERSATION.

Col"lot' d'Her"bois', 1 ko'lō' der'bwō'; 2 cō'lō' dĕr'bwā', Jean Marie (1750–¹/₁1796). A French Jacobin, the partizan of Robespierre; put to death 16,000 people at Lyons and caused Robespierre's downfall.

col"lo-tu'rine, 1 kel'o-tiū'rɪn; 2 cŏl'o-tū'rin, n. An alkaloid, crystalline in form, present in the bark of Symplocos racemosa. [< Gr. kolla, glue, + L. tus, incense.]

col'lo-type, 1 kel'o-taip; 2 cŏl'o-tīp, n. 1. Same as COLLODIOTYPE. 2. A gelatin or colloid photomechanical process or the print made by it. The process consists in printing a negative on a film containing potassium bichromate, washing the film in water, and then soaking in glycerin and water. This treatment causes the film to swell in the parts acted upon by light, thus producing a raised impression of the picture from which, after hardening, ink prints can be made. — col"lo-typ"y, n. The collotype process. See COLLOTYPE, 2.

col-lox'y-lin, 1 ko-leks'ɪ-lin; 2 cŏ-lŏks'y-lin, n. A soluble guncotton. [< Gr. kolla, glue, + OXYGEN.]

collr., abbr. Collector.

Col-lu'cian-ist, 1 ke-liū'shən-ist; 2 cŏ-lū'shan-ist, n. Ch. Hist. A believer in the semi-Arian doctrines taught by Lucian of Antioch.

col"luc-ta'tion, 1 kel'ək-tē'shən; 2 cŏl'ŭc-tā'shon, n. 1. [Archaic.] A struggling together; strife; contest. 2. [Rare.] A motion of the minute particles of any substance.

col-lude', 1 ke-liūd'; 2 cŏ-lūd', vi. [-LUD'ED; -LUD'ING.] To cooperate with a person, having a secret understanding; play into the hands of each other; conspire; connive. [< L. colludo, < col- (< cum), together, + ludo, play.] — col-lud'er, n.

col'lum, 1 kel'əm; 2 cŏl'um, n. [COL'LA, pl.] [L.] 1. Biol. The neck or a neck-like part, as of a collar-cell. 2. Bot. Same as COLLAR.

Col-lump'ton, 1 ke-lump'tən; 2 cŏ-lŭmp'ton, n. A town in Devonshire, England.

colo'nel, n. 1. The highest officer of a regiment, ranking next below a brigadier-general and next above a lieutenant-colonel: as a title, usually abbreviated Col.

In the United States army the colonel usually commands his regiment; but in the Marine Corps, in which there are no regiments, he ranks as field-officer immediately below the commandant. In the British army the office is a sinecure except in the artillery and engineers, and is commonly held by a retired general officer, while the lieutenant-colonel is the actual commander. The title is honorary and is sometimes conferred on princes of the royal house, but in certain European armies, as those of Austria, Germany, and Russia, the colonel is a field officer. The word is often used in translation from ancient languages to express comparatively high military rank. See SHOULDER-STRAP, fig. 5; INSIGNIA.

2. A kind of salmon-fly. [F., < It. colonnello, dim. of colonna (< L. columna), column.] — colonel commandant [Eng.] (Mil.), the honorary commander of a regiment or corps in the British army.— colo"nel-com"mandant'ship, n.— colo'nel-gen"er-al, *n. He put his work 'Thoughts on African Colonization' into the hands of eminent men. O. JOHNSON William Lloyd Garrison p. 130. [H. M. & CO. 1881.]

3. The temporary settling of persons in a voting-district for the purpose of voting at an election: a criminal act. — col"o-ni-za'tion-ist, n. An advocate of colonization; specifically, one of those American antislavery reformers who favored colonizing emancipated negroes in Liberia.

col'o-nize, } 1 kol'o-naiz; 2 cŏl'o-nīz, v. [-NIZED; -NIZ'- col'o-nise, } ING.] I. t. 1. To settle a colony or colonies in; also, to emigrate to, in a body or in bodies, and settle in; as, Raleigh attempted to colonize Virginia; the French colonized Louisiana. 2. To establish as colonists; as, to colonize emancipated slaves in Africa, which was the object of the American Colonization Society. 3. Specifically, to settle temporarily for voting; as, to colonize non-residents in an election district.

II. i. To establish or unite in a colony or colonies; settle in colonies.— col'o-niz"er, col'o-nis"er, n.

Co-lon'na, 1 ko-lon'nə; 2 co-lŏn'nä, n. 1. Fra Francesco (1433?–1527), an Italian Dominican monk; noted as author of Poliphili Hypneroto-machia. 2. Marcantonio (1535–8/11 1584), duke of Palliano; Italian commander at Lepanto, 1571; viceroy of Sicily. 3. Prospero (1452–12/20 1523), an Italian general who captured Milan and Genoa from France. 4. Vittoria (1490–?/21 1547), an Italian poetess; friend of Michelangelo and Cardinal Pole. 5. Cape, most S. point of Attica, Greece [anc. Su'ni-um].

col"on-nade', 1 kol"e-nēd'; 2 cŏl'ŏ-nād', n. Arch. A range of columns connected by an entablature. If there are four, it is tetrastyle; if six, hexastyle; if eight, octostyle, etc. A colonnade in front of a building is called a portico; one entirely surrounding a rectangular building, a peristyle. [F., < It. colonnato, < colonna (< L. columna), column.] col"lo-nade'†; col"on-na'dot.— col"on-nad'ed, a. Having a colonnade.

The Colonnade of the Eastern Façade of the Palace of the Louvre, Paris; designed by Perrault in 1665.

Co-lon'ne, 1 ko-lon'nē; 2 co-lŏn'ne, n. A promontory of Calabria, S. Italy. Lu-cin'i-um Prom"on-to'ri-um. [Ancient.]

col"on-nette', 1 kol"e-net'; 2 cŏl'ŏ-nĕt', n. [F.] A little column, particularly in decorative art, or in architectural use in a subordinate position, as on the face of a mullion. col"on-net'†.

co-lo'nus, 1 ko-lō'nus; 2 co-lō'nŭs, n. [L.] [-NI, 1 -nai; 2 -ni, pl.] Rom. Hist. Under the later emperors, an agricultural laborer bound to the soil; a serf.

col'o-ny, vt. [Rare.] To colonize.

col'o-ny, 1 kol'o-nɪ; 2 cŏl'o-ny, n. [-NIES, 1 -nɪz; 2 -nis, pl.] 1. A settlement made by emigrants, voluntarily or by force, in a remote region under the control of the parent country or of an organized association; as, the colony of French Guiana; penal colonies.

Colonies are such foreign possessions as are composed largely of emigrants or descendants of emigrants, and they usually possess some degree of legislative independence, as the British colonies, or a voice in the home government, as French and Spanish colonies. The British colonies are divided into (1) crown colonies, in which the legislative power remains with the home government; (2) colonies with representative governments, in which the legislature is partly elective and partly controlled by the crown, the latter reserving the right of veto on local legislation; (3) colonies having responsible governments, possessing a separate constitution, the crown having only the right of veto.

2. The territory occupied by new settlers or their descendants. 3. A number of foreigners from the same country, or of persons of the same occupation, residing in a particular locality of a city or country; as, the Chinese colony in New York city; an artists' colony.

In fact, however, the Revolution found Ireland emancipated from the dominion of the English colony.
MACAULAY England vol. iii, p. 102. [P. S. & CO. 1856.]

4. (1) An aggregation of individuals in a common household or zoœcium, as in corals, polyzoans, etc. (2) A cluster of bacteria in a pure culture. 5. A stock of bees, consisting principally of workers, but having, when perfect, one queen and at times many drones. 6. Geol. A precursory band of fossils of a higher zone in a bed included between beds of lower zones, indicating partial coexistence of two normally successive faunas. 7. Bot. (1) Two or more unicellular algæ held together by a mucilaginous common cell-wall either as a filament or as a mass. (2) A dense clump or group of one kind of plants in a plant society.

These temporary appearances of a later fauna in the midst of an older fauna are termed by Mr. Barrande 'colonies.'
NICHOLSON AND LYDEKKER Paleontology vol. i. p. 61. [W. B. 1889.]

col"o-pex'i-a, 1 kol'o-peks'i-ə; 2 cŏl'o-pĕks'i-a, n. Surg. The stitching of the colon (usually the sigmoid flexure) to the wall of the abdomen. [< Gr. kolon, colon, + pēxis, a fixing.] col'o-pex"y‡.

col"o-pex-ot'o-my, 1 kol'o-peks-ot'o-mi; 2 cŏl'o-pĕks-ŏt'o-my, n. Surg. Incision and fixation of the colon. [< COLOPEXIA + -TOMY.]

col'o-phane, 1 kol'o-fān; 2 cŏl'o-făn, n. Rosin; colophony. col'o-phan‡.

col'o-phene, 1 kol'o-fīn; 2 cŏl'o-fēn, n. Chem. An oily colorless liquid compound ($C_{20}H_{32}$) obtained by distilling oil of turpentine with sulfuric acid, formerly from colophony.

col'o-phi-lene, 1 kol'o-fi-lin; 2 cŏl'o-fi-lēn, n. Chem. A hydrocarbon of undetermined quality resulting from the action of barium hydroxid on colophene hydrochlorid.

col'o-phon, 1 kol'o-fen; 2 cŏl'o-fŏn, n. 1. An inscription or other device formerly placed at the end of books and writings, often showing the title, writer's or printer's name, and date and place of printing. 2. An emblematic device adopted by a publisher and impressed on his books, usually on the title-page of each volume. [LL., < Gr. kolophōn, summit.] — col"o-pho'ni-an, n.

Colophon of Nicolas Jenson (1481).

col"o-phon'ic, 1 kol'o-fon'ik; 2 cŏl'o-fŏn'ĭc, a. Of or pertaining to colophony. — colophonic acids, a class of isomeric acids ($C_{20}H_{30}O_2$) occurring in colophony, as pimaric, pinic, and sylvic acids. — co-loph'o-nate, n. The salt.

col'o-pho-nin, 1 kol'o-fō-nin; 2 cŏl'o-fō-nin, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_{20}H_{32}O_2+H_2O$) obtained from colophony.

col"o-pho-nite, 1 kol'o-fō-nait; 2 cŏl'o-fō-nit, n. Mineral. A reddish-brown andradite resembling rosin in color. Compare GARNET, 1 (3).

col'o-pho-none, 1 kol'o-fo-nōn; 2 cŏl'o-fo-nōn, n. Chem. The oily product of colophony by dry distillation.

col'o-pho-ny, 1 kol'o-fō-ni; 2 cŏl'o-fō-ny (XIII), n. Rosin. [< Gr. kolophōnia, < Kolophōn, city in Ionia.] col'o-pha-ny‡.

col"o-proc'ti-a, 1 kol'o-prok'ti-ə; 2 cŏl'o-prŏc'ti-a, n. Same as COLOSTOMY.

col"op-to'sis, 1 kol'ep-tō'sis; 2 cŏl'ŏp-tō'sis, n. Prolapsus or falling of the colon. [< COLON² + PTOSIS.]

col'o-punc"ture, 1 kol'o-punk'chur or -tiur; 2 cŏl'o-pŭnc'-chur or -tūr, n. Surg. Colocentesis. [< COLON² + PUNCTURE.]

col'or, col'our, cul'orᵖ, } 1 kul'ər; 2 cŏl'or, v. I. t. 1. To give a color to or put color on; infuse color into; especially, to impart a new color to; dye; tint; stain. 2. Figuratively; (1) To make to appear in a false, particularly a specious, light; represent as better or worse than the reality. (2) To modify in nature or character; give a tone to; as, to color one's opinions by one's private resentments; his French training colored his style. 3‡. To conceal.

II. i. To take on or change color; especially, to grow red in the face; blush; to show signs of ripening, as fruit. [< F. colorer, < L. coloro, < color, tint.] See CULOR. SYN.: see GARBLE; STAIN. — col'or-er, n.

col'or, n. 1. That quality of an object by which it emits, reflects, or transmits certain rays of light and absorbs others, thus producing a specific effect on the eye, depending on the nature of the rays reaching the nervous elements of the retina, the immediate stimulus of which is photochemical.

God's will moves freely, and I follow it,
As color follows light. E. B. BROWNING Drama of Exile sc. 1.

2. Any one of the hues observed in the rainbow or spectrum, or one of the tints produced by the blending of those rays: sometimes technically limited to primary colors, and then distinguished from hue (a compound color), tint (diluted with white), and shade (mixed with black). In trade use, as in dyeing, or colloquially, black and white are also included as colors. See SPECTRUM.

The sky is not blue color merely; it is blue fire — and cannot be painted. RUSKIN Modern Painters vol. iv, p. 34. [w. & s. 1858.]

3. Psychol. Any stimulation of the eye and the more internal organism of vision, subjectively regarded. All such effects are classified as sensations of color and vary in (1) color-tone, or quality as determined by the wave-lengths of the stimulus, (2) purity, or saturation, as determined by freedom from admixture of other color-tones, and (3) brightness, as dependent both upon the degree of saturation and the total intensity of the light. Various theories have been proposed to account for the experienced changes in color-sensations and similar visual phenomena as due to the results of analyzing or mixing the different color-tones, or to the different parts of the retina on which the stimulus pulls. Of these, the most celebrated are the Young-Helmholtz theory, which conjectures three substances in the retina, responding to long waves, short waves, and waves of intermediate length, of the stimulus light; and the theory of Hering, which proposes three pairs of receptors, sensitive respectively to the white-black, red-green, and yellow-blue series of stimulations. In favor of the latter theory it may be said that the sensations of the various shades of gray in the white-black series are no longer supposed to be due to absence of specific stimulus.

4. Specifically: (1) Any hue as distinguished from white; especially, the hue of a colored person; as, a man of color. (2) Bot. Any hue other than green. (3) In pictures, fabrics, etc., any hue except black or white; as, she looks better in colors than in mourning. 5. Complexion; especially, the hue of health; ruddiness; as, she had a great deal of color.

Your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose.
SHAKESPEARE 2 King Henry IV, act ii, sc. 4.

6. A paint or pigment; in printing, equal distribution of ink and strength of impression. 7. A false or superficial appearance; pretense; disguise.

The law whereby He worketh is eternal, and therefore can have no show or colour of mutability.
HOOKER Ecclesiastical Polity p. 64. [n. & s. 1888.]

8. (1) Mil. & Naval. The official flag or flags carried by a military body, regiment, or war-ship; a designated one of these; the national flag: used mostly in the plural.

In the army of the United States, and most other armies, the regiment, as the unit of organization, carries two flags: the national flag or national color and the regimental color. They are spoken of as a pair or stand of colors; or, in the U. S. cavalry, as standards. In the British army each regiment or battalion has a royal or King's color (Union Jack) and a regimental color consisting of a silk flag of a color similar to that of the regiment facings; it has the blue union in the corner and is embroidered with the number, title and honors of the regiment. In the U. S. army national and regimental colors vary in form and size. According to the U. S. Infantry Drill Regulations, "The word color implies the national color and includes the regimental color when both are present." The infantry regiments carry a national color embroidered in silver and a regimental color made of blue silk with an embroidered U. S. coat of arms containing the number and name of the regiment in white characters upon a red scroll. The battalions of engineers carry the national color, upon which is embroidered the title of the battalion, and the battalion color, which is made of scarlet silk and contains a castle in the center with the battalion number above and the words "U. S. Engineers" below. The cavalry standards are smaller than the infantry colors: the regimental standard being of yellow silk and containing an embroidered U. S. coat of arms in the center and the name and number of the regiment in yellow characters upon a red scroll. On parade the regimental is placed on the left of the national color. The colors of a war-ship are the national flag carried over the stern whenever the ship is in commission and a masthead-flag denoting the rank of its commander when he is a flag-officer; those of a yacht or a merchant ship are the national ensign (in its appropriate form — see FLAG) and the flag of the vessel's owner or club. Lack of proper colors exposes a ship to arrest for piracy, hence the phrases to show one's colors, to sail under false colors, etc. Lowering and lifting, or dipping, the colors, is a form of salute or its acknowledgment, more common and less ceremonial at sea than on land. To strike one's colors is to indicate surrender; hence the opposite phrases: to stick to one's colors, to nail the colors to the mast, and the like.

(2) A flag, badge, ribbon, or other device used as a distinction; as, college colors, colors of a race-horse, etc. (3) U. S. Army & Navy. The salute made to the national flag when it is hoisted in the morning and lowered in the evening. The ceremony is accompanied by special music. 9. Art. Coloring. 10. Mus. (1) Timbre; clang-tint. (2) The tone, or characteristic effect, of a composition as produced by specific rhythmic, harmonic, or melodic means. 11. (1) A semblance; appearance: as, having color of truth. (2) A prima-facie right. See COLOR OF OFFICE and COLOR OF TITLE, below. 12. Peculiar character; kind; variety; tone.

And of this great step, modifying profoundly the colour and character of the government.
BRYCE Am. Commonwealth vol. i, p. 386. [MACM. 1888.]

13. Phren. The faculty of appreciating colors and their harmonious combinations. 14. Her. See TINCTURE, n. 15. Law. An apparent or prima-facie right of action, but insufficient in point of law: a plea formerly advanced with a view to having a case tried by the court as a question of law instead of by the jury as a question of fact. 16. A small particle or trace of gold in auriferous sand or gravel. 17. Liveliness or animation; vividness, especially in literary work. 18. In calico-printing, a coloring-matter or mordant which is thickened with gum or starch. 19. A dye or dyestuff.

The natural and artificial colors such as dyes and dyestuffs are divided into classes according to their properties and uses. The acid colors are those which are used in an acid bath for the dyeing of animal fibers; and the basic or tannic colors are mostly substituted ammonias, and are used in calico-printing and gingham-dyeing. The direct cotton or Kongo colors are dyes that may be used without mordants. Monogenetic colors are those from which only one hue can be produced, while polygenetic colors are those from which different hues can be formed when different mordants are employed. Colors are also classed according to (1) the coal-tar compounds which they resemble or from which they are derived and (2) the organic groups which they contain. Some of these classes are the acridine colors, alizarin c. (artificial mordant dyes allied to alizarin), anthracene c., azo c. (see AZO-DYE), benzidine c., diazo c., Janus c. (a class of dyes which contain the sulfonic acid, azo, and amido groups), monoazo c., nitroso c., oxazin c., oxyketone c., phthalic anhydrid c. (such as the eosins), stilbene c., sulfid or sulfur c. (formed by fusing certain coal-tar products with sodium sulfid, thiosulfates, or sulfur), sulfone c., tetrakisazo c., thiazin c., triazo c., and xanthene c.

20. pl. Faro. A manner of playing by which the color of the card to be bet upon is determined by the color of the first winning or losing card.

— albumen color, in textile-printing, any pigment which is mechanically held to the fiber through the agency of coagulated albumen. — alluring c. (Biol.), a color in an animal or plant serving as a beneficial attraction. — animal colors, in the Darwinian theory of natural selection, certain colors distinguishing or rendering recognizable various animals, insects, etc., for specific purposes, as for concealment (see CRYPTIC, ALLOCRYPTIC, ANTICRYPTIC, PROCRYPTIC), for recognition and warning (see SEMATIC, ALLOSEMATIC, APOSEMATIC, EPISEMATIC, PSEUDAPOSEMATIC, PSEUDEPISEMATIC, PSEUDOSEMATIC, SYNAPOSEMATIC), for protection (see APATETIC), or during courtship (see EPIGAMIC, ALLEPIGAMIC). — application colors, see SPIRIT-COLORS. — artists' colors, fine pigments used by artists as distinguished from coarse ones used by house-painters. — broken color, a color produced by mixing two or more pigments. — col'or-base", n. Chem. Any basic substance whose salts are dyes, but which is itself colorless. — c.-bearer, n. See COLOR-GUARD. — c.-box, n. A box in which colors are kept. Specif.: (1) A box for artists' colors and implements. (2) The box supplying colors to the rollers in calico-printing. (3) An instrument for blending certain colors of the spectrum in given proportions. — c.-chest, n. Naut. A receptacle for flags used in signaling, etc. — c.-chord, n. A harmonious combination or group of colors, as in a painting or a costume. — c.-company, n. In a regiment, the company which has the custody of the colors. In the United States it is the left company of the right wing of a regiment. — c.-constants, n. pl. Three attributes of any color, as: (1) hue, or tone, by which varying tints are distinguishable; (2) luminosity, by which tints differ in respect to "light" and "dark" values; (3) intensity, by which colors otherwise alike differ in limpid purity. — c.-curve, n. A curve indicating the different focal lengths of telescopic object-glasses for the rays of various wave lengths. — c.-defective, n. One partially or totally color-blind. — c.-diagram, n. A systematic arrangement of colors, generally in such manner that compound colors shall lie on the straight line joining their primaries. Called, according to its shape, c.-circle, c.-triangle, etc. — c.-disk, n. A disk slit on one side from the periphery to the center, for use in a color-wheel. See COLOR-WHEEL. — c.-doctor, n. In calico-printing, a blade for wiping surplus color from the engraved roll. — c.-filter, n. Same as c.-SCREEN. — c.-guard, n. [U. S. A.] A guard for the protection of the colors. In each regiment it consists of two color-sergeants who are the color-bearers (the senior color-sergeant carrying the national color; the junior color-sergeant, the regimental color), and two experienced soldiers are picked by the colonel. — c.-hearing, n. Med. A condition in which color-sensations and acoustic sensations are habitually associated. — c.-index, n. Hemat. A guide for determining the amount of hemoglobin present in a blood-corpuscle. — c.-line, n. 1. The distinction drawn between white persons and those of negro blood. 2. Psychophysics. The outline of a plane figure, or any straight line joining two points in a solid figure, which is designed to give a diagrammatic representation of color-sensations and their interrelations. 3. pl. A series of fine parallel lines on any part of a heraldic device, denoting the tincture by their direction. — col'or-man, n. [Eng.] A maker or seller of paints or colors. — c.-mixer, n. An apparatus for mixing colors by means of a color-wheel. See SPECTRUM. — c.-mixture, n. Combination of fundamental colors into another color. — c. of office (Law), a pretense or false appearance of authority for an act done on the part of a de-facto officer. — c. of title (Law), an apparent, but not valid, title to property, especially under a written instrument. — c.-pan, n. A shallow lined vessel in which colors are mixed for cotton-printing. — c.-party, n. A party having charge of the colors of a British regiment. — c.-photography, n. The photographic reproduction of things in their natural colors: (1) theoretically by the direct action of light upon a negative; (2) practically, thus far, by the combination of negatives made through complemental color-screens, the three-color process, or as a positive on glass by the screen-plate processes, as lumière, omnicolore, etc. — c.-plate, n. Photo-engraving. One of a series or set of plates, each representing a certain portion of a picture, intended to be printed in different colors in combination: a simulation of lithographic work. — c.-screen, n. Photog. A sheet of glass, or other transparent material, absorbing a certain definite portion of the spectrum, through which only complementary rays pass to the negative. — c.-slab, n. A piece of white porcelain on which the colors used in painting porcelain are burned: used as a guide, to indicate the effect of firing on colors. — c.-standard, n. Colors standardized. See SPECTRUM. — c.-striker, n. [Eng.] A color-maker. — c.-tone, n. See TONE, 10, 11, 12. — c.-top, n. A top painted with some or all the colors of the spectrum, showing the effect of their combination during its rotation. — c.-variation, n. The range of variability in color within the limits of a species. — c.-variety, n. Zool. A variety distinguished from the typical form of the species by some constant peculiarity of color. — c.-weakness, n. Inability to distinguish colors at a low degree of saturation or intensity. — c.-wheel, n. A wheel designed to exhibit the proportion of primary colors in any shade of color. It consists of color-disks bearing primary colors and white and black, constructed so as to revolve within a graduated circle. The disks can be arranged to overlap to any desired extent, and when rapidly rotated convey the impression of the color of this combination. — complementary c., one of two colors which, when combined, produce white or nearly white light, as orange and blue. — dead c., a color that produces no reflections. — express c. (Law), the pleading of a feigned claim of right. — Fechner's colors (Psychophysics), the colors produced by the spectrum-top. — flight of colors (Psychophysics), the series of colored after-images which follow gazing at an intensely bright light. — implied c. (Law), a claim of right arising from the pleadings of the defense. — ingrain c., an insoluble color (usually an azo compound, but sometimes an inorganic compound) which has been produced directly in the fiber of the material by a chemical reaction. — interference colors, iridescent colors resulting from the interference of light. See INTERFERENCE, 2, and quotation. — mode c., in textile-coloring, a subdued shade, such as drab. — Newton's scale of colors, a scale based upon Sir Isaac Newton's observations in color. Compare NEWTON'S RINGS, under RING. — opposite c. (Psychophysics), a complementary color. — oxidation c., a color, as insoluble aniline black, which develops on the surface of calico by the oxidation of the material on which it has been impressed. — primary colors. 1. The principal colors into which white light is separated by a prism, once classified as red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet; the colors of the rainbow. 2. The colors by mixing which any other color may be obtained: given variously, now usually as red, green, and blue or violet, when they are mixed by the color-wheel, etc., and red (crimson), yellow, and blue, when they are mixed as pigments. — principal c. (Psychophysics), a psychological color of the fundamental type, such as red, blue, etc. — raised c., in calico-printing, a color that is brought out by some external agent, as a mordant. — reflection c.-mixer, a color-mixer provided with a glass put between two strips of colored paper. The reflection of one strip can be observed upon the image of the other through the glass. — saturated c., a color without admixture of black or white. — steam c., n. A mordanted color produced and fixed upon various fabrics by means of steam. — to give c., to invest with the appearance of truth or reality; in law, in pleas in confession and avoidance, to admit an apparent right in the opposite party which is then avoided by new matter. — with the colors (Mil.), serving with the regulars, and not with the reserves.

col'or-a-ble, } 1 kul'ər-ə-bl; 2 cŏl'or-a-bl, a. 1. That cul'or-a-blᵉ, } may be colored. 2. Capable of appearing true or just; having an appearance, especially a false appearance, of right or justice; specious or plausible but ostensibly true; pretended; deceptive; as, "a colorable pretence for abandoning Calais." HUME England, vol. iii, ch. 38, p. 14. [P. S. & CO. 1854.] SYN.: see OSTENSIBLE. — col"or-a-bl'i-ty, n. The quality of being colorable.

col'or-blind"ness, 1 kul'ər-blaind'nes; 2 cŏl'or-blīnd'-nĕs, n. A defect of vision, usually congenital, found in from three to five per cent. of males and a small portion of females. When total— cases of which are very rare — no distinctions of color are possible, the spectrum appearing to differ, from part to part, only in brightness. In red-green blindness, the color-tones lying between red and green or between purple and greenish-blue are confused and appear as shades of a single color. In the few cases, mostly pathological, of yellow-blue blindness, the two colors whose distinction is retained are red and green. The vision of the color-blind may therefore be called dichromatic rather than polychromatic, as in normal vision (see under COLOR). The importance of this in the case of railroad and maritime employees has led to recent great improvements in the tests for color-blindness. See DEUTERANOPIA; PROTANOPIA.

co"lo-rec-ti'tis, 1 kŏ"lo-rek-taĭ'tıs or -tī'tıs; 2 cō"lo-rĕc-tī'tis or -tī'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of colon and rectum. [< COLON² + RECTUM.]

co"lo-rec-tos'to-my, 1 kŏ"lo-rek-tos'to-mı; 2 cō"lo-rĕc-tŏs'-to-my, n. Surg. An operation for forming an artificial passage between the colon and the rectum. [< COLON² + RECTUM + Gr. stoma, mouth.]

col'ored, } 1 kul'ərd; 2 cŏl'ord, pa. 1. Having color; col'ord, } dyed or painted; tinged or stained. 2. Specifically: (1) Of a hue, not white or black; as, a colored sash. (2) Of a dark-skinned or non-Caucasian race; specifically, in the United States, of African descent, wholly or in part. Originally, the epithet was applied only to those of mixed blood, making three classes of inhabitants — white, black, and colored. (3) Having color throughout the substance: said of glass, and distinguished from enameled. (4) Bot. Having any color other than green. 3. Specious; exaggerated; embellished.

col"or-if'ic, 1 kul"ər-if'ık; 2 cŏl"or-ĭf'ic (XIII), a. Of or pertaining to the production or the sensation of color; imparting or capable of producing color. [< COLOR, n., + L. facio, make.]

col"or-im'e-ter, 1 kul"ər-im'ı-tər; 2 cŏl"or-ĭm'e-ter, n. An apparatus consisting essentially of two parallel tubes, one of which contains a standard solution of known strength, by which to estimate by comparison of depth of color the percentage of coloring substance in a given solution, as in Nessler's test, or to estimate the carbon content of steel, as Stead's colorimeter. [< COLOR, n., + Gr. metron, measure.]— col"or-i-met'ric, col"or-i-met'ri-cal, a. Of or relating to colorimetry or the colorimeter.— col"or-i-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.— col"or-im'e-try, n. The testing of a coloring or dyeing compound by comparison with color-solutions.

col'or-in, 1 kul'ər-in; 2 cŏl'er-ĭn, n. Impure alizarin as obtained by distillation from madder. [< COLOR.]

col'or-ing, 1 kul'ər-ıŋ; 2 cŏl'or-ing, n. 1. The act, art, or process of giving or imparting color; also, that which imparts color. 2. The general color, or combined effect of all the colors, of anything; also, characteristic style of applying or combining colors; as, an artist's coloring. 3. Distinguishing character; peculiar style or air; as, a book bearing the coloring of its author's surroundings.

In the warm coloring of the narrative, and in the minuteness of its details, we feel that we are reading the report of one who has himself beheld the scenes which he describes.

com-bi'nant, 1 kŏm-bai'nənt or kŏm'bi-nant; 2 com-bi'nant or cŏm'bi-nănt, n. Math. An invariant of a system of quantics, which remains unaltered (except as to a factor) not only when the variables are linearly transformed, but when a linear function of the quantics is substituted for any quantic. [< LL. combinan(t-)s, ppr. of combino; see COMBINE.]— com-bi'nan-tiv(eˢ, a. Pertaining to or of the nature of a combinant.

com'bi-nate‡, a. United; betrothed.

com"bi-na'tion, 1 kŏm'bi-nē'shən; 2 cŏm'bi-nā'shon, n. 1. A joining together so as to form a whole, or the whole produced by combining; a conjunction; as, a combination of letters; a combination of good and bad.

Nature is an endless combination and repetition of a very few laws. EMERSON Essays, History 1st series, p. 20. [H. M. & CO. 1890.]

2. The union or alliance of persons for the prosecution of a common object; also, the association thus formed: formerly almost always with the implication of confederacy, as of employers or workmen, for illegal or interested ends. Compare COMBINE, n.

Combinations for use of means of communication and transportation make railway service cheap.
R. T. ELY Intro. to Polit. Econ. p. 276. [CHAUT. 1889.]

3. Chem. The union of elements in certain fixed proportions, or the compound thus resulting. 4. Math. A group of several things or symbols in which the order of arrangement is indifferent: distinguished from permutation. 5. In organ-playing: (1) The tonal qualities resulting from the simultaneous drawing out of two or more stops. (2) The stops so drawn out. 6. The assembling of the parts, as the sprigs and ground, of lace. 7. (1) Pool. A stroke in which the object-ball is used to drive any third ball into a pocket. (2) Billiards. A stroke similar to the above, by which the third ball is pocketed or makes a carom. 8. (1) The sequence of numbers or letters forming the key symbol of a combination lock. (2) The mechanism operated or set in motion by the sequence. 9. Sports. A bet on two or more successive events on which the odds are calculated cumulatively according to the theory of probabilities. 10. pl. An undergarment in which an undervest and drawers or a short skirt are combined in one piece. [< LL. combinatio(n-), < combino; see COMBINE.] SYN.: see CABAL; CONSPIRACY; UNION.— Prep.: the combination of elements into compounds.— back combination (Photog.), that part of a double lens situated next to the focusing screen.— combination button (Organ-building), one of the push-knobs of a section of an organ. c. piston‡.— c. by volume, or by weight (Chem.), the union of elements according to fixed volumetric or gravimetric proportions, to form definite compounds.— c. car, a car containing compartments for various uses.— c. garment, see COMBINATION, 10.— c. laws [Eng.], acts of Parliament passed in 1799 and 1800 for the repression of every form of trade combination, both of employers and employed; repealed in 1824.— c. lock, see LOCK.— c. room [Eng.], the fellows' smoking-room or wine-room at Cambridge University.— theory of c., that branch of algebra which reasons about the number and kinds of combinations that may be formed from given symbols.— com"bi-na'tion-al, a. Of or pertaining to combination; having the quality of combining.

com-bi'na-tivᵉ, ⎭ cŏm-bi'na-tĭv or cŏm'bi-nā'tiv, a. 1. Relating to or affecting combination; tending to combine. 2. Math. Designating those branches of algebra which depend on the theory of combinations. com-bi"na-to'ri-al‡; com-bi'na-to-ry‡.

com'bi-na"tor, 1 kŏm'bi-nē'tər or -tor; 2 cŏm'bi-nā'tor, n. [Rare.] A combiner.

com-bi"na-tor'ic, 1 kŏm-bai'nə-tor'ik; 2 cŏm-bi'na-tŏr'ic, n. Math. A department of mathematics treating of the formation, enumeration, and properties of partitions, variations, combinations, and permutations of a finite number of elements under various conditions.

com-bine', 1 kŏm-bain'; 2 cŏm-bīn', v. [COM-BINED'; COM-BIN'ING.] I. t. 1. To bring into a close union; connect so as to make parts of the same whole, or factors in the same operation; blend; compound; as, to combine forces.

There are realities which it is impossible to combine in one subject.
CAIRD Kant vol. i, p. 124. [MACM. 1885.]

2†. To bind.

II. i. 1. To become one, or parts of the same whole; coalesce; be closely allied; associate for a purpose or in a work; cooperate; as, to combine against the saloon. 2. To unite by affinity; enter into chemical combination; as, oxygen and hydrogen combine to form water. [< LL. combino, < L. com- (< cum), together, + bini; see BINARY.] SYN.: see AGREE; CONCENTRATE; MIX.— Prep.: the acid combines with the alkali; the acid and alkali are combined in a salt; combine the factions into a party.

com'bine, 1 kŏm'bain; 2 cŏm'bīn, n. [Colloq., U. S.] A combination of persons, especially a union to effect, by underhanded dealings, what honest efforts, openly employed, can not obtain; cabal; conspiracy; by act of Congress, July 2, 1890, a combination, in the form of a trust or otherwise, to raise prices, or to obstruct the ordinary course of trade.

com-bined', 1 kŏm-baind'; 2 cŏm-bīnd', pa. United into a conglomerate whole; intimately associated; joined; confederated.— com-bin'ed-ly, adv.— com-bin'ed-ness, n.— combined method, a method of teaching deaf-mutes in which oral and written systems of instruction are combined with the manual.— combining form, a changed form of a word used as the first element of a derivative word, as cardio- (for cardiac) in cardiograph, cardiopyloric, etc.— com-bin'ing-tube", n. Engin. That portion of an injector or ejector in which the steam-jet combines with the water on which it acts.— combining weight (Chem.), the fixed and exact proportional weight, generally in comparison with the weight of hydrogen as a standard, with which an element combines with another to form a definite compound.

com-bin'er, 1 kŏm-bain'ər; 2 cŏm-bīn'ĕr, n. One who or that which combines; specif., a member of a combination; conspirator. See COMBINATION, 2.

comb'ing, 1 kōm'iŋ; 2 cōm'ing, n. 1. The act of using a comb, as in dressing hair, carding, hackling, graining, etc. 2. That which is removed by combing or carding; hair combed off; hence, a false front made of combings. 3. A coaming. 4†. Hair combed over a bald spot.— comb'ing-ma-chine", n. A machine for disentangling and straightening out wool fibers.— c.-needle, n. One of a number of needles graduated for use on the combing-cylinder of a cotton-combing machine. [press; load.

Bot.* A family of tropical polypetalous trees or shrubs — the myrobalan family — often climbing, with simple entire exstipulate leaves, and spicate or racemose perfect flowers. It embraces about 20 genera and over 250 species. [< COMBRETUM.]— com"bre-ta'ceous, a.

Com-bre'tum, 1 kŏm-brī'tum; 2 cŏm-brē'tŭm. n. Bot. A large genus of shrubs, or rarely trees, of the myrobalan family, several of which are in greenhouse cultivation for their brilliant flowers. [L., a kind of rush.]

com-bu'rent, 1 kŏm-bīū'rent; 2 cŏm-bū'rĕnt, a. Undergoing or causing combustion. [< L. comburens, ppr. of comburo, burn up.]

com-bur'gess, 1 kŏm-būr'jes; 2 cŏm-bûr'ġĕs, n. Old Eng. Hist. A member from the same borough; a fellow burgess.

com-bust', 1 kŏm-bust'; 2 cŏm-bŭst', tr. 1. [Humorous.] To consume with fire; burn up. 2†. To inflame; excite greatly.

com-bust'†, a. 1. Astrol. Obscured by proximity to the sun; extinguished by the sun's light. 2. Burnt; consumed; adust.— combust way (Astrol.), the area included in Scorpio and the second half of Libra.

com-bus'ti-bl(eᵖ, 1 kŏm-bus'ti-bl; 2 cŏm-bŭs'ti-bl, a. 1. That may be set on fire and burned; susceptible of combustion; as, paper, wood, and coal are highly combustible. 2. Easily excited to violence or passion; fiery; inflammable; as, a very combustible temper. [F., < L. combustus; see COMBUSTION.] com-bus'tious†; com-bus'tu-ous†.— com-bus'ti-bl(e-nessᵖ, n. The quality of being combustible. com-bus"ti-bil'i-ty‡.

com-bus'ti-ble, n. Any substance that will readily ignite and burn; as, pitch, coal, and other combustibles.

com-bus'tion, 1 kŏm-bus'chən; 2 cŏm-bŭs'chon, n. 1. The action or operation of burning; in science, the continuous combination of a substance with certain elements, as oxygen, chlorin, etc., accompanied by the generation of light and heat. 2†. Cremation. 3. Any furious outbreak of excitement or passion, as of a mob; disturbance; tumult.

All Virginia was in combustion. The standard of liberty was reared in every county; there was a general cry to arms.
IRVING Washington vol. i, p. 399. [G. P. P. 1863.]

3†. Astrol. Position near the sun. 4†. Inflammation. [F., < LL. combustio(n-), < L. combustus, pp. of comburo, burn up.] com-bus'ture†. SYN.: see FIRE.— Bunsen's combustion-furnace, a contrivance by means of which very high temperatures can be secured and the ultimate analysis of organic substances determined. — com-bus'tion-cham"ber, n. Mech. 1. The space in a boiler above the burning coal where the gases combine before passing through the tubes. 2. In an internal-combustion engine, the chamber in the cylinder in which the compression and burning of the charge occurs.— c. method (Chem.), a method used in ascertaining the quantity of hydrogen, carbon, etc., in a substance by burning it with air, oxygen, copper oxid, or other solid oxidizing compound, and by collecting the gases resulting: used in quantitative analysis and in ascertaining the amount of carbon in iron and steel.— c.-tube, n. Chem. A glass tube especially designed to withstand great heat as produced by the combustion method.— internal c. (Mech.), the method of operation of a common type of engine, including those in use on automobiles and motor-boats, in which the piston is actuated by the expansion of a gaseous substance burned within the cylinder. These engines are mostly explosion motors, including the gas-engine and the ordinary gasoline-engine, but the type includes also such engines as the Diesel motor, in which the working-substance is burned more gradually.— spontaneous c., the oxidation of a substance with such rapidity as to engender heat sufficient to ignite it, as masses of oiled rags, pyritous ores, coal, and certain metals.

Spontaneous combustion may take place in some kinds of vegetable and mineral substances, but not in the animal body, living or dead. A. S. TAYLOR Medical Jurisprudence ch. 34, p. 301. [J. A. C. 1866.]

com-bus'tivᵉ, ⎭ Relating to or of the nature of combustion. 2†. Combustible.

comb'y, 1 kōm'i; 2 cōm'y, a. 1. Geol. Having a formation like honeycomb; favose. 2. Made up of bands or layers of crystals arranged crosswise of the bands: said of mineral veins.

comdg., abbr. Commanding.

It traded in furs and established trading-posts from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific. In 1821 it absorbed a formidable competitor, the Northwest Company. Its monopoly of trading-rights expired in 1859, and ten years later it sold most of its interests and territory to the British government, taking a footing similar to that of other business corporations, but retaining many of its forts and trading-stations.— joint-stock c., a company or partnership whose capital is divided into shares (usually transferable), some of which are held by each of the members.— Levant C., a trading company of merchant adventurers operating at Smyrna and in the Levant under a charter of Queen Elizabeth in 1581, renewed by James I. in 1605. Through the organization of this company Great Britain established her consular system in the near east. The company was dissolved in 1825.— limited c., limited-liability c., a public company whose members are individually liable for the company's debts only to a specified amount, often not exceeding the amount of stock that each holds.— Massachusetts Bay C., an association of English Puritans organized in 1629 with the object of forming a colony In the following year it founded Boston.— ship's c., the officers and crew of a vessel.— Six Companies, a Chinese corporation formed about 1850, composed of six associations (called Hop Wo, Ning Yeung, Kong Chow, Sam Yup, Yung Yo, and Yang Ying), corresponding to six districts of the Kuangtung province. com-par'i-son, 1 kəm-par'ı-sən; 2 cŏm-păr'ı-son, n. 1. The act of comparing, or state of being compared; examination of two or more objects with reference to their likeness or unlikeness, or in order to ascertain their relative excellences or defects; as, comparison of the effects of virtue and vice. 2. An estimate or statement of the likeness of one thing or person to another or others; as, the comparison was instructive. 3. Capability of being compared; relative similitude or resemblance; as, what comparison is there between a boor and a genius? 4. That which, as by resemblance, serves as an illustration or example; a parallel; as, his bravery is without comparison. 5. Rhen. The faculty of induction or reasoning; the tendency to analyze and illustrate and trace resemblances and differences. 6. Rhet. A setting forth of the points of similarity or contrast between one thing and another. Comparison includes (1) comparison proper, in which the properties of the representative object are formally attributed to the other; (2) the simile, which turns the mind on the representative object itself· (3) contrast, which emphasizes points of difference; (4) allusion, which closely approaches metaphor, comparative words being omitted; and (5) allegory, embracing (a) allegory proper, an extended simile, omitting comparative words; (b) fable, a short narrative allegory with a moral; and (c) parable, a narrative or descriptive allegory founded on real scenes and inculcating religious truth.

7. Gram. That inflection of adjectives or adverbs which indicates differences of degree in quality, etc. There are three degrees of comparison, the positive, comparative, and superlative, the last two being regularly expressed by adding -er or -est to the positive, or by using more or most, less or least, before it.

8. Psychol. The comparative faculty; also, its exercise, or the product of that exercise. See COMPARATIVE FACULTY. [< F. comparaison, < L. comparatio(n-) < comparo; see COMPARE[1], v.] com-par'i-sont†. Syn.: see ANALOGY.— Prep.: comparison of one object to another (which it is supposed to resemble); with another (to note agreement or difference); between any two (or more) objects.— associative comparison (Psychol.), an association of two sensations in which the quality of one depends upon its relation to the quality of the other, and vice versa.— beyond c., so superior as to make comparison impossible or useless.— c. and contrast (Rhet.), that process of explanation which exhibits the theme by means of its resemblances or differences. It is (1) direct when the resemblance or difference is in the properties of the objects compared, or (2) analogical when it is in their relations.— c. of hands (Law), comparison of handwritings for the purpose of showing their genuineness or the reverse.— in or by c. of [Archaic], in c. to, in c. with, as compared or contrasted with; considered with reference to.— method of paired comparisons (Psychol.), a method in which the subject of experiment is required to compare two impressions and decide which one of the pair is more agreeable to him.

com-part', 1 kəm-pārt'; 2 cŏm-pärt', vt. To divide into compartments; partition. [< LL. compartio, < L. cum, together, + pars, part.]

com-part"i-men't'o, 1 kəm-pär"ti-men'to; 2 cŏm-pär'ti-mĕn'to, n. [-TI, 1 -ti; 2 -tī, pl.] [It.] One of the sixteen territorial divisions into which the sixty-nine provinces of the kingdom of Italy are grouped.

com"par-ti'tion, 1 kəm'pär-tish'ən; 2 cŏm'pär-tish'on, n. [Archaic.] 1. The disposition of parts, especially in the ground-plan of a building. 2. A compartment; division.

com-part'ment, 1 kəm-pärt'mənt or -mənt; 2 cŏm-pärt'ment, n. 1. One of the parts into which an enclosed space is subdivided by lines or partitions; any separate section or chamber; as, the water-tight compartments of a steamship.

The scientific man has his knowledge and notions arranged as in a museum, so that he can . . . put every new thing that presents itself in its proper compartment.
MCCOSH Psychology, Cognitive Powers p. 162. [S. 1886.]

2. [Eng.] A transverse division in a railway passenger-car, seating from six to ten persons. 3. Art. A separate division or subdivision of a painting, ceiling, etc.; a panel, cartouche, or coffer. 4. Her. One of the divisions of a shield. 5. A chamber or division in the structure of plants and animals. 6. Forestry. The unit of area treated in the working plan. The size and shape of compartments are determined mainly by topographic features. If a compartment contains a stand varying greatly in composition, age, or needs, it may be divided into two or more subcompartments, which may be either temporary or permanent. [< F. compartiment, < LL. compartio; see COMPART, v.] com-part'i-ment†.— compartment line, see RIDE, n., 9.— c. system (Forestry), see STAND METHOD, under METHOD.— wing c., one of the water-tight chambers of a war-vessel, formed underneath the lower deck between the vessel's side and the outboard longitudinal bulkhead.— com"part-men'tal, a. Relating to, divided into, or consisting of compartments. [POSANT.

cum'pass[E], | bring within one's reach and possession; obtain; grasp; attain; accomplish.

Let us be careful to take just ways to compass just things; that they may last in their benefits to us.
PENN Fruits of Solitude maxim 319, p. 63. [PH. 1785.]

2. To lay plans for; scheme; imagine; design: usually in a bad sense; as, to compass the king's death. 3. To grasp mentally; comprehend. 4. Carp. To cause to curve; bend into circular form. 5. To orient or adjust by the aid of a compass. 6. [Archaic.] To go or pass entirely around; make the circuit of. 7. [Archaic.] To close in or embrace; hem in; encompass. 8†. To circumvent.

II. i. 1. To curve; bend; be bent or curved. 2. To make a circuit; move in a circle. 3. To plot. 4. To adjust a compass; make it level. [< F. compasser, < LL. compassus; see COMPASS, n.] Syn.: see ATTAIN; SURROUND.

com'passt†, vt. To manure; compost.

com'pass, n. 1. Extent or range within limits; stretch; reach; bounds; sweep; scope; as, beyond the compass of thought; within the compass of a lifetime. 2. An enclosing line or boundary; circumference; circle; girth. 3. Moderate bounds; due limits; as, keep your desires within compass. 4. Mus. The range of tones that can be produced by a given voice or instrument. 5. An instrument for determining directions, usually by the pointing of a magnetic needle free to turn in a horizontal plane. See MARINERS' COMPASS (p. 541) and illus. under POINT. Some compasses are named (1) from their construction; as, dipping-compass (having a dipping-needle), dry or dry-card c. (instead of in a liquid-chamber), dumb c. (a horizontal card without needle), fluid-, liquid-, or oil-c. (with a card floating or submerged in alcohol and water or in oil), prismatic c. (in surveying, a hand-compass equipped with a prism arranged to permit of reading the compass while sighting); or (2) from their position; as, elevated c. (placed on a masthead, pole, or tripod, so as to be uninfluenced by the iron of the ship); or (3) from their use or from some special characteristic; as, compensated c. (corrected for deviation by means of magnets), declination c. (for measuring variations of the magnetic needle from the astronomical meridian), demagnetized c. (whose needle has become demagnetized), standard c. (isolated from disturbing influences and used to check the steering compass). 6. Figuratively, the circuit of the horizon or heavens. 7. See COMPASSES. 8. Intent, purpose, or design.

The word compass [signifies] . . . the purpose or design of the mind or will. BLACKSTONE Commentaries bk. iv, ch. 6, p. 78.

9. A circular course or journey; round; circuit. 10. Zool. A bifid process above each brace in the dentary apparatus of an echinoid or sea-urchin. 11. Archery. The angle of elevation of an arrow, or the curve described in its flight. 12. A circle. 13†. Guile; craft; an artful device. [< F. compas, < LL. compassus, circle, < L. com- (< cum), together, + passus; see PACE¹, n.] com'pas†. Syn.: see CIRCUMFERENCE.— com'-pass-bowl", *n. The hemispherical glass-covered metallic receptacle of a mariners' compass. c.-box†.— c. calipers, a caliper-like device with one leg straight like a compass and the other curved as in a caliper: used for scratching a line at the end of a board.— c.-card, *n. The circular card or dial of a mariners' compass, on which the 32 points or rhumbs are marked. It moves with the needle or needles that are attached to it.— c.-corrections, *n. pl. Naut. The degrees that have to be applied to the compass courses to obtain exact magnetic readings.— c.-corrector, *n. Naut. A magnet placed near enough to a compass to counteract the magnetism of the iron of the ship.— c. course (Naut.), the course indicated by compass.— c.-dial, *n. 1. A compass-card. 2. A small sun-dial and compass combined. — c. error, same as DEVIATION OF THE COMPASS. See under DEVIATION.— c.-headed, *a. Having a semicircular top, as an arch.— c.-key, *n. A tool for loosening or tightening the joints of compasses.— c.-plane, *n. A carpenters' plane with a convex under surface, for smoothing concave surfaces.— c.-plant, *n. Bot. 1. A bristly perennial asteraceous herb (Silphium laciniatum) native to North American prairies. The edges of its lower vertical leaves are turned nearly north and south. 2. The prairie-lotus (Lotus americanus). 3. The prickly lettuce (Lactuca scariola). c.-flower†; com'pass-weed"†. This is the compass-flower, that the finger of God has planted Here in the houseless wild. LONGFELLOW Evangeline pt. ii, iv, st. 5.

The Compass-plant. (See def. 1.)

— c.-rafter, *n. A curved or circular rafter.— c.-ring, *n. Metal. In a cupellation-furnace, an oval ring defining the hearth against the under side of which the oval "test" or cupel is pressed and made tight.— c.-rose, *n. Naut. A reference diagram appended to charts and consisting of a circle marked off in degrees or quarter-points, generally giving both true and magnetic bearings.— c.-saw, *n. A keyhole-saw, or other hand-saw that will cut in a small circle.— c.-signal, *n A signal indicating a point of the compass.— c.-timber, *n. A curved or crooked timber.— c.-window, *n. A window whose ground-plan is part of a circle; a bow window — mariners' c., the compass used by navigators. It has two or more magnetic needles or groups of needles attached to a circular card which is free to turn upon the point of a steel cone, or, in good modern instruments, floats on a liquid. On the upper surface of the card are marked the 32 points of the compass: north, north by east, north-northeast, northeast by north, northeast, northeast by east, east-northeast, east by north, east, etc. See illus, and POINTS OF THE COMPASS, under POINT.— plain c., a surveyors' instrument consisting of a compass, graduated horizontal circle, sights, and level, borne on a Jacob's-staff.— surveyors' c., an azimuth-compass with horizontal sights for use by surveyors.— to fetch a c., to make a circuit; go round about.

com'pass, adv. 1. In archery, at an elevation; so as to follow a curve, as an arrow in its flight. 2†. So as to complete a round or cycle.

com'pass-a-ble, 1 kum'pas-ə-bl; 2 cŏm'pas-a-bl, a. Capable of being compassed; attainable.

com'pass-es, 1 kum'pəs-ez; 2 cŏm'pas-ĕs, n. pl. An instrument consisting of two (sometimes more) branches or legs, usually pointed, and joined at the top by a pivoted joint or a spring, used for taking or marking measurements, subdividing distances, describing circles or curves, etc Some compasses are named from their construction or uses, others from their inventors; as, beam compasses (the points slide on a rod), bow or bow-spring c. (having usually, instead of a joint, an elastic curved strip between the legs), bullet, club, or cone c. (having, in place of the point, on one foot a ball or cone), caliper-c. (see CALIPER), elliptic or oval c. (for drawing ellipses), hair c. (of very delicate adjustment) millwrights' c. (used in dressing millstones), Napier's c. (have folding legs, one with a pivoted pencil and a point, the other a pen and a point), pillar c. (in one arm of which a pen or pencil may be inserted), proportional, bisecting, double, or whole-and-half c. (X-shaped pair of stepping dividers with two pairs of points, which spread to extents proportionate to their distances from the common pivot, which latter is usually adjustable so as to vary the proportion), quadrant c. (having a quadrantal arc and binding screw), rack c. (with a rack adjustment), scribing c. (having one leg sharp-pointed and the other scooped), solar c. or solar attachment (attached to a theodolite, enabling the observer to ascertain the true meridian by setting the sights upon the sun), triangular c. (having three sharp-pointed legs united at a common point: for stepping off the relative positions and distances of three points, as in map-plotting, etc.), tube c. (resembling Napier's, but with extensible tubular legs), Compasses.

1. Sculptors' compass of three points. 2. Ordinary compass. 3. Proportional compasses, for reducing and enlarging in proportion. 4. Bow-spring pencil-compasses.

universal c. (with hollow adjustable legs, each having a bow compass which may be used independently or as a part of the large compass), volute c. (whose legs can be expanded so as to admit of drawing a spiral), Weber's c. (an esthesiometer), wing c. (having an arc and a set-screw).

com'pass-ing†, a. Curving; incurvated; as, the compassing arbors. [passionate.

com-pas'sion, 1 kem-pash'ən; 2 cŏm-păsh'on, rt. To com-

com-pas'sion, n. 1. Sorrow or pity, with desire to help or to spare, excited by the suffering or distress of another or others; sympathy with pain or sorrow that prompts one to relieve; commiseration.

By compassion we make another's misery our own; and so, by relieving them, we relieve ourselves also. T. BROWNE Religio Medici p. 417. [H. & B. 1852.]

2†. Participation in suffering; also, any sorrow or sorrowful emotion. [F., < LL. compassio(n-), < compassus, pp. of compatior, < L. com- (< cum), together, + patior, suffer.] com-pas'sionate†. Syn.: see MERCY; PITY. — Prep.: the compassion of the benevolent for the needy.

com-pas'sion-a-bl(e)ness, 1 kem-pash'ən-ə-bl; 2 cŏm-păsh'on-a-bl, a. Pitiable.

II. i. To make amends; serve as an equivalent or substitute: with for.

Bronze . . . assumes a splendor and majesty which almost compensate for marble itself. LANDOR Pericles lxxii, p. 66. [H. BROS. 1871.]

com"pen-sa'tion, 1 kem'pen-sē'shən; 2 cŏm'pĕn-sā'-shon, n. 1. The act of compensating, the state of being compensated, or that which compensates; whatever makes good loss or lack, or counterbalances variation; payment; amends; especially, an equivalent in value or the like.

All situations in life have their compensations along with them. FROUDE John Bunyan p. 172. [H. 1880.]

2. Mech. Means of counteracting variations, as of temperature, neutralizing opposing forces, as of magnetic attraction, or maintaining equilibrium. 3. Law. (1) Pecuniary amends for loss, privation, or injury; the usual measure of damages in actions either from breach of contract or for tort. (2) In the civil and Scots law, a set-off. 4. Pathol. An enlargement in the size, accompanied by an increase in the functional activity, of organs or parts of organs to compensate for defects existing in homologous organs or in parts of the same organ, as the heart and kidneys. 5. See COMPENSATORY LENGTHENING below. 6. Psychol. The neutralization of a sensation by means of a complementary or antagonistic stimulus process. 7. Bot. The existence in the same plant of opposite abnormal states, as a hypertrophied condition of one part occurring with an atrophied condition of another. [< L. compensatio(n-), < compensatus; see COMPENSATE.] Syn.: see RECOMPENSE; RESTITUTION.

— compensation, compensated, or compensating balance, bars, or pendulum, a balance, bars, or a pendulum in the making of which two or more metals of different expansive qualities are used, to counteract the effect of variations of temperature.— c. curb, a bar of laminated metal formerly employed in compensation balances.— c. of functions (Pathol.), the law that inhibition of cerebration in one region of the brain is accompanied by increased cerebration in the related regions.— com"pen-sa'tion-sac", n. A cavity in the body of certain polyzoans to which water may be admitted.— c. supply or c. water (Law), water stored in reservoirs for return to a river or stream in times of drought, to compensate for water claimed by riparian owners.— com"pen-sa'tion-al, a.

com-pen'sa-tiv", } I. a. Compensatory.

Adam: The heavenly life and compensative rest Shall come by means of thee.
E. B. BROWNING Drama of Exile sc. 3.

com'pen-sa"tor, 1 kom'pen-sē'tər or -tor, 2 cŏm'pĕn-sā'tor, n. One who or that which compensates, as a device for neutralizing the influence of local attraction upon a compass-needle or an automatic apparatus for equalizing the pressure of gas in the retorts or mains. Specif.: (1) Optics. A device designed to equalize the retardation of a beam of light. (2) Phot. An apparatus for equalizing the light of a field. (3) Elec. A transformer having but one winding with primary and secondary taps. — com-pen'sa-to-ry, a. Making or serving as compensation or amends; compensative.

The compensatory remedies consist in actions for pecuniary damages. POMEROY Municipal Law pt. iii, ch. 1, p. 377. [A. 1864.]

com'plex, 1 kəm'pleks; 2 cŏm'plĕks, a. 1. Containing or consisting of connected, combined, or interwoven parts, things, or elements; composite. 2. Complicated, as in structure; not easily explained; involved; intricate. 3. Logic. Noting terms made up of combinations of words. Compare CATEGOREMATIC; SIMPLE; SYNCATEGOREMATIC. [< L. complexus, pp. of complector, encircle, < com- (< cum), together, + plecto, braid.]

Syn.: abstruse, complicated, composite, compound, confused, conglomerate, entangled, heterogeneous, intricate, involved, manifold, mixed, multiform, obscure, tangled. That is complex which is made up of several connected parts. That is compound in which the parts are not merely connected, but fused, or otherwise combined into a single substance. In a composite object the different parts have less of unity than in that which is complex or compound, but maintain their distinct individuality. In a heterogeneous body unlike parts or particles are intermingled, often without apparent order or plan. Conglomerate (literally, globed together) is said of a confused mingling of masses or lumps of various substances. The New England pudding-stone is a conglomerate rock. In a complex object the arrangement and relation of parts may be perfectly clear; in a complicated mechanism the parts are so numerous, or so combined, that the mind can not readily grasp their mutual relations; in an intricate arrangement the parts are so intertwined that it is difficult to follow their windings: things are involved which are rolled together so as not to be easily separated either in thought or in fact; things which are tangled or entangled mutually hold and draw upon each other. The conception of a material object is usually complex, involving form, color, size, and other elements; a clock is a complicated mechanism; the Gordian knot was intricate; the twining serpents of the Laocoon are involved. We speak of an abstruse statement, a complex conception, a confused heap, a heterogeneous mass, a tangled skein, an intricate problem; of composite architecture, an involved sentence; of the complicated or intricate accounts of a great business, the entangled accounts of an incompetent or dishonest bookkeeper. See OBSCURE.— Ant.: clear, direct, homogeneous, obvious, plain, simple, uncombined, uncompounded, uniform, unraveled.

Composite Flower.

a, section of flower-head of the sneezeweed (Helenium autumnale); b, a ray-floret; c, section of a disk-floret.

— Composite architecture, an order of Roman architecture related very closely in general arrangement and general proportion to the Corinthian, but whose capital represents a combination of the Roman, Corinthian and Ionic. See ROMAN ARCHITECTURE, under ROMAN.— c. balance (Elec.), a balance which can be used as a wattmeter, a voltmeter, or an ammeter according to the coil connections. — c. candle, a candle composed of mixed materials; specif., a candle composed of stearin and stearic acid.— c. carriage, a railway-coach with compartments of more than one class.— c. determinant (Math.), a determinant formed by adding together all possible determinants formed by suppressing the superfluous columns in an array having more columns than rows.— c. group (Math.), a group containing a self-conjugate sub-group or groups, unity being excluded.— c. number, a number that can be exactly divided by any whole number above one.— c. photograph, a photographic picture formed by combining several portrait images so that their principal points practically coincide.— c. proposition (Logic), a proposition containing and stating a number of propositions.— com-pos'ite-ly, adv.— com-pos'ite-ness, n.

com-pos'ite, n. 1. That which is composed or made up of parts; a compound.

O man, strange composite of Heaven and earth! NEWMAN Dream of Gerontius st. 2.

2. [C-] Arch. The Composite order. 3. Bot. A composite plant.

com"po-si'tion, 1 kem'po-zish'ən; 2 cŏm'po-sish'on, n. 1. The act, process, or art of composing or making up, or the state or manner of being composed; a putting together of parts, ingredients, etc., to form a whole. Specif.: (1) The act, process, or art of inventing and producing a literary, musical, or artistic work or any part thereof.

The word composition has been so much abused, and is in itself so expressive, that when I wrote the first part of this work I intended always to use, in this final section of it, the word 'invention,' and to reserve the term 'composition' for that false composition which can be taught on principles. RUSKIN Modern Painters vol. v, pt. viii, ch. 1, p. 164. [W. & S. 1875.]

(2) The general structural arrangement or style of a work of art or a literary or musical production. (3) Print. The act or process of setting type for printing.

2. com"pre-hend', 1 kem"pri-hend'; 2 cŏm"pre-hĕnd', v. I. t. 1. To include, contain, or take in, either literally, figuratively, or by implication; comprise; enclose; encompass. 2. To lay hold of or take in with the mind so as to have an adequate conception of; grasp mentally; have full knowledge of, as distinguished from apprehend; understand; as, to comprehend the meaning of a term; man apprehends God, but can not comprehend Him.

To comprehend is to have a complete and exhaustive knowledge of an object. It is to understand its nature and its relations. C. HODGE Systematic Theology vol. i, pt. i, ch. 4, p. 337. [S. 1872.]

3†. To accomplish; catch; overtake. 4†. To sum up. II†. i. To take hold, as a growing graft. [< L. comprehendo, < com- (< cum), together, + prehendo, seize.] com"pre-hende'†.— com"pre-hend'er, n.

com"pre-hen'si-ble, 1 kom"pri-hen'si-bl; 2 cŏm"pre-hĕn'si-bl, a. 1. Capable of being comprehended or grasped by the mind; intelligible; conceivable. 2. [Rare or Obs.] Capable of being comprised. [< L. comprehensibilis, < comprehensus, pp. of comprehendo; see COMPREHEND.] com"pre-hend'i-bl(e[P]t. — com"pre-hen"si-bil'i-ty, n. The state or quality of being comprehensible. com"pre-hen'si-bl(e-ness‡[P].— com"pre-hen'si-bly, adv.

com"pre-hen'sion, 1 kem'pri-hen'shən; 2 cŏm'pre-hĕn'shon, n. 1. The act, process, or result of grasping ideas, facts, etc., with the mind, or the power of doing so; ability to know; understanding; as, to attain a full comprehension of a fact. 2. The act or state of including, containing, or taking in; inclusion; as, the comprehension of many facts in a statement. 3. Comprehensiveness. 4. Logic. Content. 5. Rhet. Synecdoche. 6. Eccl. Hist. The principle or policy of including all Christians within one church organization. 7†. A summary or epitome. [< L. comprehensio(n-), < comprehensus, pp. of comprehendo; see COMPREHEND.]

com"pre-hen'sive, 1 kem'pri-hen'siv; 2 cŏm'pre-hĕn'-com"pre-hen'sīv[S], a. 1. Comprehending or capable of comprehending a great number of objects or a wide range of thoughts, etc.; large in scope or content; including much; marked by breadth of views, mental grasp, sympathies, or the like.

The notions of Dryden were formed by comprehensive speculation. JOHNSON Lives of the Poets vol. iii, p. 115. [J. M. 1854.]

2. Having the power of fully understanding or comprehending; as, a comprehensive intellect. 3. Biol. Combining the characteristics of various diverse types; synthetic. 4. Logic. Of or pertaining to the complete understanding of class characteristics; intensive.— comprehensive type (Paleon.), a homogeneous organism of a remote geological period whose characteristics are represented in later periods in differentiated, heterogeneous groups. generalized type‡. [< LL. comprehensivus, < L. comprehensus; see COMPREHENSION.] — com"pre-hen'siv(e-ly[P], adv.— com"pre-hen'siv(e-ness[P], n.— com"pre-hen'sor†, n. One who comprehends.

com'pre-mise†, n. Compromise. com'pri-mise†.

com-prend'†, v. To comprehend.

com-pres'by-ter†, n. A fellow presbyter.— com-pres"-by-te'ri-al†, a. Of or pertaining to a body of presbyters.

com-press', 1 kem-pres'; 2 cŏm-prĕs', vt. 1. To press together or into smaller space; reduce in size or volume; condense, or make more firm and solid by or as by pressure; compact; concentrate; as, to compress gas.

In the case of the Coast Range every two or two and a half miles of original breadth has been compressed into one mile. JOS. LE CONTE Compend of Geology pt. ii, ch. 5, p. 228. [A. 1886.]

2. Surg. To close, as a wound, by compression. 3. [Archaic.] To keep under restraint; repress. 4. To put under the influence of compressed air. 5†. To embrace carnally. [< L. compressus, pp. of comprimo, < com- (< cum), together, + premo, press.] SYN.: see ABBREVIATE; CONCENTRATE.

com'press, 1 kem'pres; 2 cŏm'prĕs, n. 1. Any device used in compressing. (1) Med. (a) A soft pad, as of folded linen or of lint, for making local pressure. (b) A wet cloth, covered with oiled silk or other envelop, applied to the body, as to lessen inflammation. (2) An apparatus for compressing bales of cotton, etc. 2. [Colloq., Southern U. S.] A cotton-baling establishment. [< F. compresse, < L. compressus; see COMPRESS, v.]

com-pressed', 1 kem-prest'; 2 cŏm-prĕst', pa. 1. com-prest'[P], Pressed together or into smaller compass; made compact; condensed by or as by pressure; as, compressed lips. 2. Biol. Flattened laterally; reduced in breadth: opposed to depressed. 3. Bot. Flattened, especially laterally.— compressed air, air reduced in volume by pressure, so that its expansive force can be utilized.— com-press'ed-ly, adv.

com-press"i-bil'i-ty, 1 kem-pres"i-bil'i-ti; 2 cŏm-prĕs"i-bil'i-ty, n. The quality of being compressible; that property by virtue of which the volume of a body may be lessened by compression. com-press'i-bl(e-ness[P]‡.

In liquids it was long believed there was no compressibility, but in reality liquids possess this property to a greater extent than solids. B. SILLIMAN, JR. Physics pt. i, ch. 2, § 21, p. 11. [L. B. & CO.]

com-press'i-ble, 1 kem-pres'i-bl; 2 cŏm-prĕs'i-bl, a. com-press'i-blᵖ, Capable of being compressed, or pressed into smaller compass; also, disappearing under pressure; as, a compressible pulse.

com-press"i-cau'date, 1 kem-pres"i-kō'dēt; 2 cŏm-prĕs"i-cą'dāt, a. Having the tail compressed. [< L. compressus (see COMPRESS, v.) + cauda, tail.]

com-pres'sion, 1 kem-presh'ən; 2 cŏm-prĕsh'on, n. 1. The act of compressing, or the state of being compressed.

By what process of compression did the great soul of Wilberforce get into a frame so slender? W. M. PUNSHON Lectures and Sermons, Macaulay p. 43. [E. & L.]

2. Constraint, as by force or authority; repression. 3. Condensation of thought or language in writing. 4. Astron. & Geol. The deviation of a planet in shape from a perfect sphere; ellipticity. 5. Mech. The total change in shape of any substance resulting from pressure. 6. Engin. The placing of a workman in an air-chamber prior to work in a caisson. [< L. compressio(n-), < compressus; see COMPRESS, v.] — com-pres'sion-cham"-ber, n. A compartment of an apparatus the volume of which may be increased or diminished by the action of a piston.— c.-cock, n. See COCK.— c.-coupling, n. A shaft-coupling by means of which sections of driving-shaft are accurately joined end to end, split cones on the ends effecting the union.— c.-curve, n. A diagrammatic curve which shows the pressures existing in the cylinders of an engine.— c.-cylinder, n. 1. Same as AIR-COMPRESSOR. 2. A cylinder in which air under pressure receives and neutralizes impact or shock, thus serving as an air-spring. — c.-machine, n. 1. Any apparatus for compressing air, liquids, or other substances. 2. An instrument by means of which the physical constants of gases are determined. 3. An apparatus for determining the compressive strength of various substances.— c.-member, n. Engin. Any part of a framework, as a strut, against which pressure is exerted. — c. of the brain, that condition of the brain which is induced by rupture of a blood-vessel, fracture of the skull, pressure of a blood-clot, or growth of a tumor within the skull. The most common symptom is coma.— c. of the poles (Astron.), the oblateness or ellipticity of the earth or any other planet. See ELLIPTICITY.— c.-slope, n. Ordnance. The conform diminution of the bore of a rifle adjacent to the powder-chamber, used for condensing the soft band of the projectile.— c.-tap, n. Mech. In a gasoline-engine, a small valve in the cylinder-head by which a portion of the charge is allowed to escape, preventing compression.— c.-valve, n. See VALVE.— initial c. (Mech.), the compression to which a built-up gun is subjected when bound with wire or hoops shrunk on.— isothermal c., reduction in the volume of a fluid without any change in its temperature.— com-pres'sion-al, a. Of, pertaining to, or producing compression.

com-pres'sive, 1 kem-pres'iv; 2 cŏm-prĕs'iv, a. T... com-pres'sīv[S], ing to or having power to ... — com-pres'siv(e-ly[S], adv.

com-pres'sor, 1 kem-pres'ər; or -er; 2 cŏm-prĕs'or,

Air-compressor for furnishing air in mines, caissons, et... a, air-cylinder; i, pressure-indicator; o, oiler; s, st... v, safety-valve.

One who or that which ... presses. Specif.: (1) Anat. muscle that causes ... sion; as, the compressor of the nostrils. (2) A machine apparatus for compressing air, gases, or other ... such as hay or cotton. (3) An instrument for applying compress to, or for compressing, a limb in surgical ... tions. (4) A device for producing a graduated ... upon an object under microscopic examination. com" pres-so'ri-um‡. (5) Naut. A lever for checking the ... ning out of a chain cable. (6) A device for holding a ... carriage to its slide to check recoil. [L., < compressus; see COMPRESS, v.] com-press'er‡.

com-print', 1 kem-print'; 2 cŏm-print', v. [Rare.] Eng. Hist. To print concurrently (as with the King's Printer) The right of comprinting privileged books was possessed ... the 17th century by the King's Printer, the St... Company, and the university presses. [< COM- + PRINT.]

com-pri'sal, 1 kem-praiz'əl; 2 com-pri'zal, n. [Rare.] The act or fact of comprising; inclusion; an epitome.

com-prise', 1 kem-praiz'; 2 cŏm-prīz', vt. [-PRISED -PRIS'ING.] 1. To comprehend summarily or co... tively; include and cover; consist of; embrace. 2. T... bring within its own or a specified limit. 3†. [C... To attach for debt. 4†. To compress. [< F. compris pp. of comprendre, < L. comprehendo; see COMPREHEND.] com-prize'‡. SYN.: see CONTAIN; EMBRACE.— com-pris' (or -priz')a-bl(e[S]‡, a.

com-pri'sor, 1 kem-prai'zər or -zer; 2 cŏm-pri'sor, n. Law. One who attaches property.

com'pro-bate†, vt. To prove jointly; concur; confirm. — com"pro-ba'tion†, n.

com"pro-duce', vt. To produce simultaneously or to... gether.— com"pro-duc'tion, n.— com"pro-duc'tīv(e[S], a.

com'pro-mise, 1 kem'pro-maiz; 2 cŏm'pro-mīz, v. com'pro-mizeˢ, [-MISED; -MIS'ING.] I. t. 1. To adjust or settle by mutual concessions; compound; as, to compromise a lawsuit. 2. To endanger the interests or reputation of; expose to risk, suspicion, or scandal; commit, as to a hazardous course; compromit; as, to compromise one's reputation.

If a reception is going to compromise our position in the future I wish you would tell me. E. EGGLESTON Faith Doctor p. 80. [A. 1891.]

con'cu-bine, n. 1. A woman who cohabits with a man without marriage; a kept mistress.

Among the ancient Hebrews the concubine originally acted as a substitute for a barren wife. Her children were not considered illegitimate, but their claims as heirs could be compounded by gifts from the father. Under the Roman empire a concubine was a quasi-wife, recognized by law where there was no legal wife, but not sharing the rank and position of the man, nor were her children considered as born in lawful wedlock. They were, however, admitted to limited rights of succession, and could be legitimated by the marriage of their parents.

The word concubine, . . . which in the Republic had the same signification as among ourselves, represented in the Empire a strictly legal union—an innovation which was chiefly due to Augustus. LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. ii, p. 370. [A. 1873.]

2. A paramour: formerly applied also to a man. con-cur'sus, 1 ken-kūr'sus; 2 cŏn-cûr'sŭs, n. [L.] Theol. The harmonious cooperation and concurrence of the First Cause with second causes in the development of nature and history.

con-cus'co-nin, 1 ken-kus'ko-nin; 2 cŏn-cŭs'co-nin, n. Chem. A crystalline alkaloid ($C_{32}H_{32}N_2O_4+H_2O$) obtained from cuprea-bark. [< CON- + CUSCONIN.] con-cus'co-nine†.

con-cuss', 1 ken-kus'; 2 cŏn-cŭs', vt. [Rare.] 1. To affect or injure (the brain) by concussion. 2. To force or intimidate into action. 3. To agitate; shake. [< L. concussus, pp. of concutio, < con- (< cum), together, + quatio, shake.] — con-cus'sant, a. [Rare.] Of, pertaining to, or produced by concussion; as, a concussant noise.— con"cus-sa'tion†, n. A violent shock.

con-cus'sion, 1 ken-kush'ən; 2 cŏn-cŭsh'on, n. 1. The act of shaking violently, as by a sudden blow, or the state or result of being so shaken; shock; agitation; especially, in surgery, a violent shock to some organ by a fall or a sudden blow; as, the concussion of a shot.

Nature has floated our brains in fluid so that only the severest shocks can give them a concussion. W. JAMES Psychology vol. i, p. 107. [H. H. & CO. 1891.]

2. Civ. Law. Extortion by threats of violence; blackmailing: distinguished from robbery in that no actual force or violence is applied. [< L. concussio(n-), < concussus; see CONCUSS.]

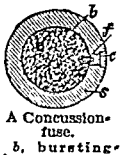
Syn.: see BLOW; COLLISION; SHOCK.— con-cus'sion-bel"lows, n. An automatic auxiliary bellows for regulating the wind-pressure in an organ.— c.-box, n. Mech. A box fitted with partitions or other obstructions for the purpose of lessening or destroying the effects caused by sound or shock; a muffler.— c.-fuse, n. A fuse that is ignited by the concussion of a shell in striking.— c.-table, n. A table for sorting fragments of ore by means of jarring and the action of gravity.



A Concussion-fuse.

b, bursting-charge; c, cap; f, fuse; s, shell.

con-cus'sion-al, a.— con-cus'sion-a-ry†, n. An extortioner.— con-cus'-siv(e*), a. Tending to produce concussion; of the nature of concussion; agitating.

con-cust', pp. Concussed. S. S.

con-cu'tient, 1 ken-kiū'shent; 2 cŏn-cū'shĕnt, a. Coming suddenly and violently together; encountering by concussion. [< L. concutien(t-)s, ppr. of concutio; see CONCUSS.]

con-cyc'lic, 1 ken-sik'lik; 2 cŏn-çÿc'lic, a. Geom. 1. Lying around or upon the circumference of one circle: said of any series of points. 2. Exhibiting circular sections when cut by the same system of parallel planes: said of two or more conicoids.

cond†, vt. 1. To con, as a ship. 2. To escort. 3. To signal; balk. cund†.

Con"da"mine', n. Same as LA CONDAMINE.

Con"dé', 1 kōn'dē'; 2 cŏn'dé', n. 1. Prince de (8/31530–3/111569), Louis I. de Bourbon, general-in-chief of the Huguenots; killed after surrender at Jarnac. 2. Prince de, "the Great" (9/31621–13/111686), Louis II. de Bourbon, a French general who captured Paris, 1649. 3. Prince de (8/31736–5/111818), Louis J. de Bourbon, a French general; royalist refugee; served in the Austrian and Russian armies. 4. 1 kōn'dē; 2 cŏn'dé, José Antonio (1765–10/201820), a Spanish historian and Orientalist; Dominion of the Arabs in Spain. 5. Condé-sur-l'Escaut, a historic town in Nord department, France, from which the princes of Condé derived their title.

con-demn', } 1 kon-dem'; 2 cŏn-dĕm', vt. [CON-DEMNED'; con-dem'n, } CON-DEMN'ING. 1. To express opinion or sentiment against; judge with disapproval or severity; hold to be wrong; reprehend; censure. 2. To pronounce judicial sentence or render verdict against; declare a penalty against; doom; as, the prisoner was condemned to hard labor.

The Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death. Matt. xx, 18.

3. To pronounce unfit for use, commonly by official action; as, the health officer condemned spoiled meat. 4. To order to be taken for public use or purposes by judicial decree; as, to condemn land for a railway; also, to declare forfeited, as a vessel. 5. To indicate the culpability of; show to be worthy of condemnation; as, his writings condemn him. 6. To close up, or to withdraw from public use, as a door, gate, or road. 7†. To convict (of). 8†. To fine: with in. [< L. condemno, < con- (< cum) intens. + damno; see DAMN, v.]

Syn.: arraign, blame, censure, convict, denounce, doom, reprove, sentence. We may censure silently; we condemn ordinarily by open and formal utterance. Condemn is more final than blame or censure; a condemned criminal has had his trial; a condemned building can not stand; a condemned ship can not sail. One is convicted when his guilt is made clearly manifest to others or to himself; in law, one is convicted only by the verdict of a jury. In stating the penalty of an offense, the legal word sentence is probably now more common than condemn; as, he was sentenced to imprisonment. But it is good usage to say he was condemned to imprisonment. See BLAME. Compare synonyms for ADMONISH; ARRAIGN; REPROVE.— Ant.: absolve, acquit, applaud, approve, exonerate, justify, pardon, praise.— Prep.: condemned to death for his crime. — con-dem'na-bl(e*), a.— con-demn'er, n.

con"dem-na'tion, 1 kon'dem-nē'shən; 2 cŏn'dĕm-nā'-shon, n. 1. The act of condemning, or the state of being condemned, in any sense. 2. Disapprobation.

It would be easy to pour overflowing vials of condemnation on many sides of Voltaire's character and career. J. MORLEY Voltaire p. 99. [MACM. 1885.]

con-dem'na-to-ry, 1 ken-dem'na-to-rı; 2 cŏn-dĕm'na-to-ry, a. Containing censure or reprobation; expressing sentence or condemnation; as, a condemnatory decree.

The first Christian emperor issued the first edict in the Roman Empire condemnatory of the gladiatorial games. LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. ii, p. 35. [A. 1886.]

con-demned', } 1 ken-demd'; 2 cŏn-dĕmd', pa. 1. Incon-demd'*, } tended for persons under condemnation of death; as, the condemned cell, ward, pew, sermon, etc. 2. Pronounced guilty or worthless; as, a condemned man or building. 3. [Colloq.] Damned.

con-dens'a-bl(e*), 1 ken-dens'ə-bl; 2 cŏn-dĕns'a-bl, a. That may be condensed, in any sense; as, steam is condensable. con-dens'i-bl(e*†.— con-dens"a-bil'i-ty, n.

con-den'sate, 1 ken-den'sēt; 2 cŏn-dĕn'sāt, vt. & vi. [Rare or Obs.] To condense.— con'den-sa"tor, n. A condenser.

con-den'sate, I. a. Condensed. II. n. A product of condensation.

con"den-sa'tion, 1 kon'den-sē'shən; 2 cŏn'dĕn-sā'shon, n. 1. The act or process of making dense or denser; also, the state of being condensed, in any sense. 2. Any product of condensing; as, a powerful condensation from acids. 3. Physics. The reduction of a vapor or gas to a liquid or a solid, or of a liquid to a solid or semisolid. See CONDENSE, in all senses. 4. Chem. Rearrangement of atoms to form a molecule of greater weight. 5. In a metaphorical sense, concentration. [< LL. condensatio(n-), < L. condensatus, pp. of condenso; see CONDENSE.] — assimilatory condensation (Phon.), the compression of a phrase by the omission of one or more syllables, usually occurring where two riming sounds appear consecutively. Compare BRUNCH; HAPLOLOGY.— c. product, a compound formed by chemical condensation.— con"den-sa'tion-al, a.

con-dense', 1 ken-dens'; 2 cŏn-dĕns', v. [-DENSED'; -DENS'ING.] I. t. 1. To bring into a smaller and denser state; reduce the bulk of; compress; consolidate; as, to condense milk by evaporation. 2. To bring the matter of into smaller compass; abridge; epitomize; as, to condense an essay.

Shakespeare . . . was compelled to condense ages into days. E. P. WHIPPLE Lit. Age of Elizabeth p. 35. [O. & CO. 1871.]

3. To change from the gaseous or vaporous to the solid or liquid state, as by cooling or compression.

If the wind be colder than the clouds, it will condense their vapor into rain. D. A. WELLS Science of Common Things answer 509, p. 80. [H. H. & CO.]

II. i. To become condensed; especially, to be changed from a gaseous to a liquid or solid form; as, the vapor condensed rapidly. [< F. condenser, < L. condenso, < con- (< cum), together, + densus, thick.] Syn.: see ABBREVIATE; CONCENTRATE.— Pred.: condense by cold into a liquid.— condensed type, type thin in comparison to its height.— con-dens'a-tiv(e*), a. Able or tending to condense.— con-dens'ed-ness, n.

con-dense'†, a. Condensed; dense.

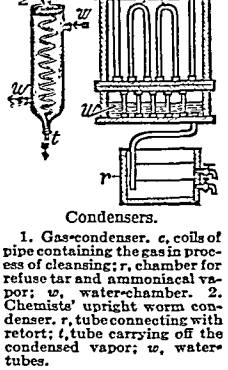
con-dens'er, 1 ken-dens'ər; 2 cŏn-dĕns'er, n. One who or that which condenses; especially, any device, machine, or apparatus for condensing. (1) An appliance in connection with a steam-engine for condensing exhaust-steam, and thus producing a partial vacuum in the cylinder on the exhaust side of the piston, thus increasing the power. (2) Any apparatus for the concentration or volume-reduction of a substance, as a solution, a syrup, a gas, an ore, or a metalliferous slime. (3) The lens or lenses, or the reflector, in a microscope, projecting lantern, etc., for concentrating rays or illuminating the object observed. (4) That part of a cotton-gin which compacts the lint, or a device for forming carded wool slivers into slubs. (5) Elec. An apparatus for accumulating or concentrating electricity, by the effect of mutual induction between conducting plates separated by a dielectric: usually of tin-foil sheets, separated by oiled silk or paper. (6) The worm of a still. (7) A device to separate impurities from illuminating-gas by condensation.



Condensers.

1. Gas-condenser. c, coils of pipe containing the gas in process of cleansing; r, chamber for refuse tar and ammoniacal vapor; w, water-chamber. 2. Chemists' upright worm condenser. r, tube connecting with retort; t, tube carrying off the condensed vapor; w, water-tubes.

— Abbé condenser (Micros.), an achromatic lens used to concentrate light upon the object under examination.— bull's-eye condenser, same as BULL'S-EYE, 4.— condens'er-gage", n. A vacuum-gage.— c.-yarns, n. pl. [Cant.] Spinning. Cotton yarns made from roving manufactured on a carding-machine provided with a condenser.— counter-current c., a jet condenser in which the air-current is forced in a direction opposite to that of the water, so that the air is thoroughly cooled.— injection c., jet c., or siphon c., a condenser in which the injection-water comes in contact with the steam.— musical c. (Elec.), a condenser attached to a telephone transmitter for reproducing musical sounds made near the telephone receiver.— reflux c. (Chem.), a condenser which returns the condensed vapors to the chamber from which they came.— surface c. 1. In steam-engines, a condenser in which the steam is brought into contact with plates or tubes having cold water on the other side: distinguished from a jet or rose condenser, in which the cooling water is in contact with the steam. 2. Sugar-making. An evaporating-cone.

con-dens'er-y, 1 ken-dens'ər-ı; 2 cŏn-dĕns'er-y, n. [-IES, 1 -IZ; 2 -IS, pl.] A condensed-milk factory.

con-dens'i-ty, n. [Archaic.] Density; condensation.

con'der, 1 ken'dər; 2 cŏn'der, n. Same as CONNER².

con"de-scend', 1 ken"dı-send'; 2 cŏn"de-sĕnd', vi. 1. To stoop, in some special act, from a position of rank or dignity; come down voluntarily to equal terms with inferiors; be kind, affable, or social, as with an inferior; deign.

He condescends to them of low estate.
JEAN INGELOW Brothers, and a Sermon st. 64.

2. [Rare.] To submit or yield, as to a command. 3. [Scot.] To make particular mention; particularize; specify: with upon; as, to condescend upon particulars. 4†. To make concessions. [< F. condescendre, < LL. condescendo, < L. con- (< cum), together; and see DESCEND.]

Syn.: bend, come down, deign, descend, humble oneself, stoop, yield.— Ant.: disdain, scorn, spurn.— Prep.: to.—

con"de-scend'ing, 1 ken'dı-send'ıŋ; 2 cŏn'de-sĕnd'ing, pa. Showing condescension; gracious; patronizing.— con"de-scend'ing-ly, adv.

con"de-scen'sion, 1 ken'dı-sen'shən; 2 cŏn'de-sĕn'shon, n. The act of condescending; a voluntary stooping or lowering of oneself, as to one in lower rank or position; graciousness or courtesy to inferiors. [< LL. condescensio(n-), < condescensus, pp. of condescendo; see CONDESCEND.] Syn.: see FAVOR.— con"de-scent'†, n. Condescension, or an act of condescension.

Con"dé'-sur-Noi"reau', 1 kōn'dē'-sür-nwa'rō'; 2 cŏn'dā'-sür-nwā'rō', n. A town in Calvados department, France.

Con"de-su'yos, 1 kōn"dē-sū'yos; 2 cŏn'de-su'yōs, n. A district of Arequipa department, Peru.

con-di'cion†, n. Condition. con-di'ci-oun†.

con-dic'tion, 1 ken-dik'shən; 2 cŏn-dic'shon, n. Rom. Law. An action to prosecute a claim upon another to do or give some defined thing. Such an action fell into one of three categories: (1) for the recovery of something stolen (condictio furtiva); (2) for the recovery of money paid by mistake (condictio indebiti); (3) for the enforcing of a legal prohibition or decree (condictio ex lege). [< CON- + L. dictio(n-), speaking.]

con-did'dle, 1 ken-did'l; 2 cŏn-did'l, vt. [Scot. & Eng. Dial.] To purloin; spend heedlessly.

con-dign', 1 ken-dain'; 2 cŏn-dīn', a. 1. Well deserved or bestowed; merited; worthy; in present use, deservedly thorough and severe: said of censure or punishment.

Our Savior has brought out very distinctly the fact that the misapplication of small abilities will meet with condign punishment. W. B. STEVENS Parables Unfolded p. 88. [ST. & CO.]

This word is loosely used in the sense of severe. Condign means deserved. To say that one deserves condign punishment is tautological; to say that he does not deserve it is a contradiction in terms.

2. [Archaic.] Deserving. [< F. condigne, < L. condignus < con- (< cum) intens. + dignus, deserving.] con-dign'ı†.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

con-dig'ni-ty, 1 ken-dig'nı-tı; 2 cŏn-dĭg'ni-ty, n. 1. Scholastic Theol. The relation of equality between the merit of action, conduct, or person, and the value of the award due or meted out. 2. Personal merit as a ground of salvation; the doctrine that man can so live as to deserve eternal life. 3†. Merit in general.

con di"li-gen'za, 1 kōn di"lı-jen'dzɑ; 2 cŏn dĭ"lĭ-ġĕn'dzā. [It.] Mus. With perseverance; carefully.

Con"dil'lac', 1 kōn'dı'yȧk'; 2 cŏn'dē'yăc', Étienne Bonnot de (1715–⁷/₈ 1780). A French ecclesiastic and philosopher; Origin of Human Knowledge, etc.

con'di-ment, 1 ken'dı-ment or -mənt; 2 cŏn'dı-ment, n. A sauce, relish, spice, or the like, used to season or give relish to food. [< L. condimentum, < condo, preserve, < con- (< cum), together, + -do, put.]— con'di-ment, vt.— con"di-men'tal, a.— con"di-men'ta-ry, a.

con'ding-ly, 1 ken'dıŋ-lı; 2 cŏn'ding-ly, adv. [Scot.] Pleasantly; merrily. [A fellow disciple.

con"dis-ci'ple, 1 ken"dı-sai'pl; 2 cŏn'di-çī'pl, n. [Rare.]

con'dise,† n. pl. [F.] Conduits. CHAUCER Rom. of R. l. 1,414.

con-dite'†, vt. To pickle or preserve.— con'dite†, a. Pickled.— con'dite-ment†, n. 1. A preserve; condiment. 2. Medicine mixed with some sweet substance.

con-di'tion, 1 ken-dish'ən; 2 cŏn-dish'on, v. I. t. 1. To place a condition or conditions upon; limit, restrict, or determine by a condition; as, he conditions his going upon the weather. 2. To constitute the condition of; be prerequisite to. 3. [U. S.] To subject (a student) to a condition. See CONDITION, n., 11. 4. To test or determine the condition or quality of, as goods. 5. To specify as a condition; require: with a clause as object; as, I must condition that the money be first paid. 6. To render fit or in good condition. 7. Metaph. To restrict in forming a mental concept. 8. Milling. To subject, as grain, to steam or heat before sending to the rolls. II. i. 1. To bargain or stipulate. 2. To circumscribe definitely an object of thought. 3. To acquire the proper condition; as, this wine will condition shortly. [< LL. conditiono, < L. condicio(n-); see CONDITION, n.] con-di'tion, n. 1. The state or mode in which a person or thing exists. Specif.: (1) The manner in which persons or things are situated in relation to their environment; the position or case of a person or thing; plight; as, the condition of a house. (2) The relative state of a commodity, as grain, to perfect. 2. One's state as regards soundness and health; specifically, a sound or healthful state.

— con-di'tion-er, n. 1. One who or that which conditions. 2. Milling. A grain-drying machine.

We must be at the top of our condition to understand anything rightly. EMERSON Society and Solit. p. 146. [H. M. & CO. 1890.]

3. Any one of the circumstances by which an activity or a mode of existence is limited and modified.

The outer conditions of the life of Christ . . . are utterly irreconcilable with the vaunted mythical theory. JOHN YOUNG Christ of History bk. i, pt. iii, p. 52. [C. & BROS. 1860.]

4. An event, object, fact, or being that is necessary to the occurrence or existence of some other, tho not its cause; a prerequisite; a sine qua non: especially in logic; as, power is a condition of activity. 5. Something stipulated or required as prerequisite to a promise or to its fulfilment; any one of the terms upon which an agreement is made; as, one condition of the bargain was payment within 30 days. 6. A grade or rank; especially, high or comparatively high social position; also (rarely), moral or spiritual state; as, persons of condition must still keep the laws.

If he have the condition of a saint and the complexion of a devil. SHAKESPEARE Merchant of Venice act i, sc. 2.

7. Law. A qualification or limitation annexed to an agreement, by which it may be continued, altered, or rendered of no effect upon the performance or non-performance of something, or the happening or not happening of an uncertain event. If the event must happen before the agreement begins to operate, the qualification is called a condition precedent; if afterward, a condition subsequent. Conditions in law are classified as follows: (1) affirmative; (2) casual; (3) consistent; (4) express; (5) implied; (6) mixed; (7) negative; (8) positive; (9) potestative; (10) repugnant; (11) resolutory; and (12) suspensive.

8. Gram. That clause of a conditional sentence usually introduced by if; the protasis. See CONDITIONAL SENTENCE, under CONDITIONAL. 9. Math. A state of case which must necessarily exist because of the existence of another state: termed a necessary condition in contradistinction to a sufficient condition, which of itself brings about the state of which it is the condition. The more important conditions are both necessary and sufficient; thus, such a condition in the case of the quadratic $ax^2 + 2bx + c = 0$ is that $b^2 - ca = 0$ if the equation is to have equal roots. 10. Logic. Same as ANTECEDENT, 3. 11. [U. S.] A requirement upon a student in school or college to give proof of proficiency (generally by passing a reexamination) in a study in which he has previously failed to reach a given rank, as a prerequisite to matriculation, advancement, graduation, or the continuance of present standing. 12. Lupulin powder. 13†. Disposition; temper. [F., < L. condicio(n-), < con- (< cum), together, + dico, mention.]

con-di'cion†; con-di'ci-ount. Syn.: see CAUSE.— out of condition, not in normal health or flesh.

con-di'tion-al, 1 ken-dish'ən-əl; 2 cŏn-dish'on-al, a. 1. Containing, expressing, or imposing conditions; limiting or limited by restrictions or stipulations; not absolute. 2. Math. Stating the conditions. 3. Logic & Gram. Expressing or implying a condition; as, a conditional clause.

A Conditional Judgment affirms such a relation between two others, respectively called Antecedent and Consequent, that, if the former be true, the latter is true also, as, if the sun shines it will give heat.
L. H. ATWATER Elementary Logic ch. 3, p. 92. [L.]

[< LL. conditionalis, < L. condicio(n-); see CONDITION, n.] con-di'cion-el†; con-di'tion-a-ry†.

— conditional conjunctions, forms, particles, such conjunctions, forms, and particles as denote a condition or supposition, as if, supposing (that), if not, unless, except, without, whether, as if, albeit, etc.— c. proposition or sentence, in logic and grammar, a hypothetical proposition or sentence consisting of two clauses, one (protasis) expressing the condition, the other (apodosis) containing the conclusion; as, if you speak the truth, I have broken the laws.— c. syllogism, in logic, that form of hypothetical syllogism in which the reasoning is based upon a conditional judgment embodied in the major premise. Compare HYPOTHETICAL SYLLOGISM.— con-di'tion-al, n. A word, clause, particle, proposition, etc., indicative of a condition. — con-di'tion-al-ist, n. One who believes that a truth or theory depends on conditions, as those persons who in the 17th century believed that God's grace was dependent upon conditions.— con-di"tion-al'i-ty, n. The quality or state of being conditional.— con-di'tion-al-ize, vt. [Rare.] To qualify by conditions.— con-di'tion-al-ly, adv. With conditions or limitations.

con-di'tion-ate, 1 ken-dish'ən-ēt; 2 cŏn-dĭsh'on-āt, vt. To qualify; regulate; condition.

con-di'tion-ate. I. a. Subjected to conditions; conditional. II. n. A thing conditioned; a contingency. [< LL. conditionatus, pp. of conditiono; see CONDITION, v.]

con-di'tionds, } Limited by or subjected to a condition or contingency; as, a bond conditioned on faithful performance of duty. 2. Existing under necessary relations or as necessarily related; as, motion is conditioned on space. The universe is conditioned as dependently related to God, Who is the Absolute. 3. Affected in a given way or existing in a given state, especially by reason of one's surroundings; circumstanced; placed; environed; as, a well-conditioned merchant.

con-di'tioned, n. Metaph. 1. That which is placed under limitations by becoming an object of thought, or which is conditioned by being made comprehensible to human cognition. 2. That which, taken collectively, is absolutely dependent on other being than itself.

con"di-vert', 1 ken"dı-vȭrt'; 2 cŏn"di-vĕrt', vt. Math. To transpose (the several members of a magic square) by conversion and diversion so that lines 1, 2, 3, 4 shall stand 2, 1, 3, 4, and columns 1, 2, 3, 4 shall stand 3, 4, 1, 2.— con"di-ver'sion, n.

con"di-vi'sion, 1 ken'dı-vig'ən; 2 cŏn'di-vĭzh'on, n. A logical division either coordinate with or crossed by another.

con-dol', 1 kon-dōl'; 2 cŏn-dōl', n. [P. I.] Bot. A cucurbitaceous plant (Cucurbita aspera), the fruit of which is used for making sweets.

con-dole', 1 ken-dōl'; 2 cŏn-dōl', v. [-DOLED'; -DOL'ING.] I. t. [Rare.] To grieve over with another; lament or bewail. II. i. To grieve or express sympathy with one in affliction; grieve or lament with another.

She had no kind of grace about her but the grace of sympathy; but when she condoled with the woman and her own tears fell, she wanted no beauty. DICKENS Bleak House ch. 8, p. 145. [E. & L. 1886.]

con-do'lence, 1 ken-dō'lens; 2 cŏn-dō'lĕnç, n. Expression of sympathy with a person in pain, sorrow, or misfortune. con-do'lance†; con-dole'ment‡. Syn.: see CONSOLATION; PITY.— con-do'lent, a.

con do-lo're, 1 kōn do-lō'rē; 2 cŏn do-lō'rę. [It.] Mus. Mournfully.

Con"dom', 1 kōn'dōn'; 2 cŏn'dōn', n. [department, France. A town in Gers con-dom'i-nance, 1 ken-dem'ı-nəns; 2 cŏn-dŏm'i-nanç, n. Biol. In the Mendelian theory, the dominance of one factor through the ineffectiveness or inconspicuousness of another usually associated with it.

con"do-min'i-um, 1 ken'do-min'ı-um; 2 cŏn'do-min'i-ŭm, n. [Recent.] Joint government; codominion. [< CON- + DOMINIUM.]— con-dom'i-nate, a. [CONDONATION.

con-do'nance, 1 ken-dō'nəns; 2 cŏn-dō'nanç, n. Same as con"do-na'tion, 1 ken'do-nē'shən; 2 cŏn'do-nā'shon, n. 1. The act of condoning; the forgiveness or overlooking of a wrong.

There ought to be little condonation of the foibles, and none at all of the moral obliquities of the dead.
J. MORLEY Voltaire ch. 3, p. 96. [A. 1872.]

2. Law. The forgiveness on the part of a husband or wife, by word or conduct, of a breach of marital duty by the other, whereby the forgiving party is precluded from afterward claiming redress for the breach so condoned. Cohabitation with the guilty party after the offense is known is evidence of condonation, and no action lies unless the offense be repeated. con-done'ment‡.— con-don'er, n.

con-do'na-tive, } 1 ken-dō'nə-tıv; 2 cŏn-dō'na-tiv, a. [Rare.]
con-do'na-tiv'e, } Forgiving.

con-done', 1 ken-dōn'; 2 cŏn-dōn', vt. [-DONED'; -DON'ING.] 1. To treat as overlooked or forgiven; forgive; remit; pardon; as, to condone an offense. 2. Law. To forgive, either expressly or by implication (a breach of the marriage contract). See CONDONATION. [< L. condono, give, < con- (< cum), together, + dono; see DONATE.] Syn.: see PARDON.

con'dor, 1 ken'dər; 2 cŏn'dŏr, n. 1. A very large South-American cathartoid vulture (Sarcorhamphus gryphus), dwelling principally in the high Andes, about 3 feet long, and with a wing-expanse of sometimes 9 feet.

Andean Condor. 1/18

Its plumage is blackish, with white bars across the wings and a white frill at the base of the neck, above which the neck and head are naked and much caruncled. It feeds mainly upon carrion.

2. The similar, but nearly extinct, California vulture (Pseudogryphus californianus). 3. [S. Am.] A gold coin. See COIN. [Sp., < Peru. cuntur, condor.] con'dore†; cun'tur†.

Con"dor'cet', 1 kōn'dōr'sē'; 2 cŏn'-dŏr'çę', Marquis de (⁹/₁₇1743–⁵/₂₈ 1794). Marie Jean A. N. Caritat, a French mathematician; philosopher and publicist; Problem of Three Bodies, etc.

con"dot-tie're, 1 ken'dot-tyē'rē; 2 cŏn'dŏt-tyę'rę, n. [-RI, 1 -RI; 2 -RĪ, pl.] [It.] A military chief of the 14th and 15th centuries who sold the services of himself and his troop to any warring state or monarch.

con-duce', 1 ken-diūs'; 2 cŏn-dūç', v. [-DUCED'; -DUC'ING.] I. i. To help or tend to bring about a result; contribute: followed by to; as, quietness conduces to mental balance.

It cannot be denied but outward accidents conduce much to fortune. BACON Works vol. i, p. 293. [H. G. B. 1871.]

II†. t. 1. To conduct; bring about. 2†. To hire. [< F. conduire, < L. conduco, < con- (< cum), together, + duco, lead.]

con-du'civ(e³, 1 ken-diū'sıv; 2 cŏn-dū'çiv, a. Promotive of a result; contributing to an end; leading; helping.

con-duct', 1 ken-dukt'; 2 cŏn-dŭct, v. I. t. 1. To accompany and show the way; guide; escort.

It needed an unsleeping eye and a powerful brain to conduct her over the quicksands and through the whirlpools.
MOTLEY John of Barneveld vol. i, ch. 1, p. 9. [H.]

2. To exercise direction over; manage; carry on.

It is dangerous to conduct a philosophic discussion by talking.
DE QUINCEY Essays on the Poets p. 29. [T. & F. 1859.]

3. To direct in action or behavior; behave: reflexive. 4. To serve as a medium of transmission for; carry; convey; especially, in physics, to transmit by conduc-tion. 5. To control and lead as a director or commander; as, to conduct a concert; to conduct an attack. II. i. 1. To act or serve as a conductor or transmitter; as, copper conducts better than iron. 2. To direct or lead, as a musical director; as, the maestro conducts well. 3. To behave; act; as, how did the débutante conduct? [< L. conductus; see CONDUCT[1], n.] con-ducte'†; con-dult'†. Syn.: see GOVERN; INTRODUCE; LEAD; REGULATE.

con'duct[1], 1 kən'dukt; 2 cŏn'dŭct, n. 1. The way in which a person acts or lives; the doing or deeds of a person, collectively considered; behavior; deportment; as, conduct befitting a gentleman. 2. The act or process of managing or carrying on; direction; control; administration; as, the conduct of the affair was left to the ambassador.

What is power, But the nice conduct of another's weakness?
HENRY BROOKE Gustavus Vasa act iv, sc. 1.

3. Ethics. The voluntary direction of the powers and faculties to appropriate ends, especially as regards morality and religion; as, proper self-conduct is one of the highest moral requirements.

But ethics — first, last and all the time — deals with what is practical, or with doing in the form of human conduct.
G. T. LADD Knowledge, Life, and Reality p. 2696. [D. M. & CO.]

4. The action of guiding or leading; escort; convoy; guidance; safe-conduct; as, under the conduct of a guide, we left the city. 5. The mode of execution or development; style or way of managing; as, the conduct of a plot in a drama. 6. Dexterous or skilful management; tact or address in action. 7†. A conductor; guide; also, a conduit. 8†. A passport. 9†. Conduct-money. [< LL. conductus, < L. conductus, pp. of conduco; see CONDUCE.] con'dult†. Syn.: see BEHAVIOR; DISPOSAL.— con'duct-book", n. [U. S. Navy.] A book in which the deportment of seamen is recorded.— c.-money, n. A tax that Charles I. of England levied for paying the traveling expenses of the army.

con-duc'tance, 1 kən-duk'təns; 2 cŏn-dŭc'tanç, n. Elec. Conductive capacity for which the unit is the mho (ohm spelled backward).— specific conductance (Elec.), the conductance of any particular piece of material one square centimeter in cross-section by one centimeter in length.

con-duct'i-ble, } 1 kən-duct'ɪ-bl; 2 cŏn-dŭct'i-bl, a.
con-duct'i-bil'ity, } Capable of being conducted or transmitted.— con-duct'i-bil'i-ty, n. Capability of being conducted; also, capacity for conducting; conductivity.

con-duct'ing-bar", n. A comb-bar.

con-duc'ti-o, 1 kən-duk'shi-ō; 2 cŏn-dŭc'shi-ō, n. [L.] Civil Law. A contract for personal services.

con-duc'tion, 1 kən-duk'shən; 2 cŏn-dŭc'shon, n. 1. Physics. The transmission of heat, sound, or electricity through matter without motion of the affected body as a whole: distinguish from convection and radiation.

Heat is communicated in three ways. 1st. By conduction (chiefly in solids). 2d. By convection, or circulation, in liquids or gases. 3d. By radiation.
B. SILLIMAN, JR. Physics pt. iii, p. 430. [I. B. & CO.]

2. Physiol. The transference of the influence of a stimulus along the nerve-fibers from the point of irritation to the nerve-center; the spread of contraction from a point of influence in muscle-tissue. 3. Transmission or conveyance in general. 4†. A training up, as of a child. [< L. conductio(n-), < conductus; see CONDUCT[1], n.] — avalanche conduction (Neurol.), the nerve-current transference which may occur when the terminal filaments from one nerve-cell come in contact with several other nerve-cells.— Fourier's law of c. (Math.), the law that the quantity of heat w, passing across a given area q, within a conducting substance is $w = qk\frac{dx}{dt}$, where k is the conductivity of the substance and $\frac{dx}{dt}$ is the temperature gradient.— Wernicke's aphasia of c., word-deafness.

con-duc'tiv[s], } Having the power of conducting; as, conductive bodies. 2. Elec. Proceeding by or resulting from conduction: opposed to disruptive; as, a conductive discharge.

con"duc-tiv'i-ty, 1 kən'duk-tiv'ɪ-ti; 2 con'dŭc-tĭv'i-ty, n. 1. Ability to conduct. 2. Phys. Ability to conduct heat or electricity; also, the number representing the degree of such ability in terms of a standard unit.

Hence the conductivity of electrolytes increases as the temperature rises. J. C. MAXWELL Electricity p. 105. [MACM. 1888.]

3. Physiol. The property of nerve-fibers by which they conduct stimuli.

— conductivity water (Phys. Chem.), water which has been purified in the highest degree and as far as possible freed from the presence of dissolved substances: used as in measuring the electrical conductivity of solutions.— external c., same as EMISSIVITY.— molecular c. (Phys. Chem.), the ratio formed when the specific electric conductivity of any solution is divided by its concentration.— specific c., same as SPECIFIC CONDUCTANCE.— surface c., the quantity of heat radiated by a square centimeter surface, per second, when temperature is one degree above that of the surrounding medium.— thermal c., the total amount of heat simultaneously passing through a plate of unit area and thickness in unit time, when its opposite surfaces maintain one degree difference of temperature.— thermometric c., the thermal conductivity with a unit of heat sufficient to raise a unit volume one degree.

con"duc-tom'e-ter, 1 kən'duk-tom'ɪ-tər; 2 cŏn'dŭc-tŏm'e-ter, n. Any instrument for measuring the conductive capacity of substances for electricity, heat, etc. [< L. conductus (see CONDUCT[1], n.) + metrum (< Gr. metron), measure.]

con-duc'tor, 1 kən-duk'tər or -tor; 2 cŏn-dŭc'tor, n. 1. One who leads or shows the way; an escort; guide; leader. Specif. (Mil.): (1) In the British army a person employed in the supply service: formerly, a driver in the artillery. (2) A trooper skilled in cavalry instruction who guides novices through the evolutions.

2. [U. S.] An officer of a railroad who has charge of a train or car and collects tickets and fares. 3. Any manager or director of a movement or operation; especially, the director of an orchestra or chorus. 4. Any conducting medium, material, or device; a conduit; especially, any body or medium having sensible conductivity for electricity or heat; specifically, a lightning-rod.

A very usual problem which the chemist has to solve is, whether a substance be a conductor of electricity or not.
FARADAY Chemical Manipulation p. 488. [C. & S. 1831.]

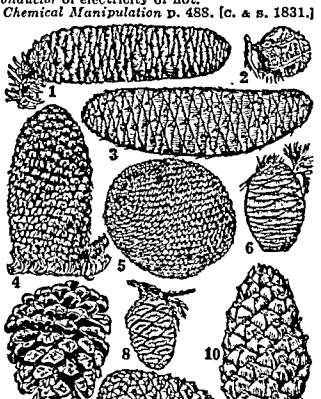
5. Surg. A grooved staff used to guide the course of a probe or the like. 6. [Archaic.] A commander; chief. 7. Law. One who hires, or leases. [LL., < L. conductus; see CONDUCT[1], n.] — asymmetric conductor (Elec.), a conductor which transmits power in one direction more readily than in the opposite direction.— con-duc'tor-head", n. A funnel-ended leading-pipe to convey liquid nearly horizontally from one vessel to another.— c.-rail, The Big Tree. 9. Scotch Pine. 10. Swiss Pine.



Cones.
1. Spanish Silver Fir. 2. Bald Cypress. 3. Silver Fir. 4. Noble Fir. 5. Brazilian Pine. 6. Lebanon Cedar. 7. Stone-pine. 8.

n. Elec. rail which carries the electric current to the motors of an electric railway.— conjugate conductors (Elec.), a pair of conductors, each being part of a divided circuit arranged in such a way that an electromotive force in one does not induce a current in the other.— cord c. (Elec.), a conductor made of several thin wires twisted into a cord and enveloped by an insulator: such conductors are used where flexibility is required, as for switchboard connections.— core c. (Physiol.), an instrument for testing electrotonus fitted with a metal core for carrying the electric current.— neutral c. (Elec.), a conductor situated between the positive and negative conductors and having half the voltage of each, as in the Edison system.— prime c., the positive conductor of a frictional electric machine.— con-duc'to-ry, a. Having tendency to conduct.— con-duct'ress, n. A female conductor. con-duc'tor-ette†.

con-duc'tus, 1 kən-duk'tus; 2 cŏn-dŭc'tŭs, n. A type of medieval vocal music where the tenor part is often a variation from the main song, or even adapted from a popular air. [L.; see CONDUCT[1].] con'dut†.

con'duit, } 1 kən'dit; 2 cŏn'dit (XIII), n. 1. A means con'dit†, } for conducting something, particularly a tube, pipe, or passageway for a fluid; an aqueduct; in music, a brief connecting phrase. 2. A passage or subway for containing electric wires, underground cables, gas- and water-pipes, or the like. See illus. under MANHOLE. 3. A channel or medium of transmission; as, the nerves are conduits of sensation. 4. A secret underground passage. 5. [Rare.] A fountain or a reservoir. [F., < LL. conductus; see CONDUCT[1], n.] con'duyte†.— conduit system, a system of electric-railway construction in which the power-wire or -rail is laid in a conduit beneath the track.— subtrolley c., a conduit for the protection and insulation of subsurface trolley-wires.

con-du'pli-cate, 1 kən-diū'pli-kēt; 2 cŏn-dū'pli-cāt, vt. [-CAT'ED; -CAT'ING.] To double or fold together.

con-du'pli-cate, a. Doubled together. Specifically, in botany: (1) Folded together along the midrib, so that the halves are face to face, the upper face of the leaf being within: said of a leaf in vernation. (2) Folded upon themselves and around the caulicle: said of the cotyledons in a seed. con-du'pli-cat"ed†.— con-du"pli-ca'tion, n. [Rare.]

con"du-ran'gin, 1 kən'diu-ran'jin; 2 cŏn'dū-răn'gin, n. Chem. A glucosid obtained from the bark of Marsdenia condurango, of which the commercial variety is a bitter amorphous yellow powder ($C_{15}H_{28}O_7$) used in medicine for chronic dyspepsia and gastric cancer. From the same source a white substance ($C_{29}H_{52}O_6$) insoluble in water, and a new glucosid ($C_{40}H_{74}O_8$) slightly soluble in water have been obtained.

con"du-rau'go, 1 kən'diu-rau'go; 2 cŏn'dū-răn'gō, n. [Peru.] 1. The condor-vine (Marsdenia condurango), of the milkweed family, of New Granada, producing a bark which was reputed to be a cure for cancer. 2. The bark obtained from this vine. cun"du-ran'go†.

con"du-ran'ster-in, 1 kən'diū-ran'stər-in; 2 cŏn'dū-răn'ster-in, n. Chem. A cholesterin relative of condurangin ($C_{28}H_{48}O_2$). Nat. Form. p. 479. [L. BROS. & CO. '05.] [< CONDURANGO + STEARIN.]

con-dur'rite, 1 kən-dur'ait; 2 cŏn-dŭr'it, n. A soft black copper ore from the Condurrow mine, Cornwall.

Con"dy-lar'thra, 1 kən'di-lär'thrə; 2 cŏn'dy-lär'thra, n. pl. Mam. An Eocene suborder of taxeopodous ungulates having the astragalus not interlocked laterally with tibia and its head rounded, including Phenacodontidæ, etc. [< Gr. kondylos, knuckle, + arthron, joint.] — con"dy-lar'thran, a. & n.— con"dy-lar'throus, a.

con"dy-lar-thro'sis, 1 kən'di-lär-thrō'sis; 2 cŏn'dy-lär-thrō'sis, n. [-SES, 1 -siz; 2 -ēs, pl.] Anat. A movable joint in which a convex ellipsoidal head fits a corresponding hollow. [< Gr. kondylos, knuckle, + arthrōsis, articulation.]

con'dyle, 1 kən'dil; 2 cŏn'dyl, n. 1. Anat. & Zool. An enlarged and prominent end of a bone, as of the occipital bone, the femur, or the humerus, including its articular surface; bony eminence, as the mandibular condyle, situated on the distal end of the quadrate bone in birds, or the pterygoid c., which projects from the anterior extremity of the quadrate and articulates with the pterygoid. 2. Zool. A rounded end of a tibia or similar part in arthropods. 3. An ancient Greek measure of 1½ inches. [< L. condylus, < Gr. kondylos, knuckle.] con'dyl†; con'dy-lus†.— con'dy-lar, a. Of, pertaining to, or near a condyle; having condyles. con-dyl'i-an†.— con'dy-loid, a. Resembling or connected with a condyle.

con-dyl'i-on, n. See CRANIOMETRY.

con"dy-lo'ma, 1 kən'di-lō'mə; 2 cŏn'dy-lō'ma, n. [-MA-TA, pl.] 1. Pathol. An indolent wart-like growth, sometimes syphilitic, usually near the anus and external genitals of either sex. 2. Vet. An enlargement of the papillæ, due to chronic inflammation, appearing in the hoof-cleft of cattle. [< L. condylus; see CONDYLE.] con'dy-lome; con"dy-lo'sis.— con"dy-lom'a-toid, con"dy-lom'a-tous, a.

Con-dyl'o-pa, 1 kən-dil'o-pə; 2 cŏn-dyl'o-pa, n. pl. Zool. The Condylopoda or Arthropoda.— con'dy-lope, n.

Con"dy-lop'o-da, 1 kən'di-lop'o-də; 2 cŏn'dy-lŏp'o-da, n. pl. Zool. 1. A section of Arthropoda including all except the Malacopoda. 2. The Arthropoda. [< Gr. kondylos, knuckle, + pous (pod-), foot.] — con-dyl'o-pod, a. & n.— con"dy-lop'o-dous, a.

con"dy-lot'o-my, 1 kən'di-lot'o-mi; 2 cŏn'dy-lŏt'o-my, n. Surg. Excision of the whole or part of a condyle. [< CONDYLE + -TOMY.]

con'dy-lure, 1 kən'di-liūr; 2 cŏn'dy-lūr, n. A talpine insectivore (genus Condylura), as the star-nosed mole of North America. [< Gr. kondylos, knob, + oura, tail.]

cone, 1 kōn; 2 cōn, vt. & ti. [CONED; CON'ING.] 1. To shape conically; as, the coned tread of a car-wheel. 2. To bear cones. 3. To wind on a cone, as thread.

cone, n. 1. A solid figure that tapers uniformly from a circular base to a point. If the point lies in the perpendicular from the center of the base, the cone is a right cone, otherwise an oblique cone.

Apollonius of Perga . . . appears to have been the first who perceived that the circle, ellipse, parabola, and hyperbola could be formed by different sections of the same cone.
R. ROUTLEDGE Popular Hist. Science p. 43. [R. & S. 1881.]

2. Geom. Any surface generated by the movement according to any law of an indefinite line one point of which is fixed: an extension including the first definition as a particular case. 3. Bot. A dry multiple fruit (technically a strobile), composed of a dense aggregation of scales arranged symmetrically around an elongated axis and bearing naked seeds on the upper side, as in the pine family.

Like two cathedral towers these stately pines
LONGFELLOW My Cathedral st. 1.

4. A symmetrical mountain-peak; specifically, the tapering mass of ejected material accumulated round a volcanic crater. 5. Same as CONE-SHELL (below). 6. Mech. Any of several conical instruments or parts, as either of the two taper drums in the head-stock of a spinning-mule: called the backing-off and drawing-up cones. 7. Same as CONE OF THE RETINA. 8. The vent-plug of a firearm. 9. A cone-wheel or stepped pulley. 10. Entom. One of the crystalline conical formations immediately at the back of the corneal facets of the multiple eye of an insect. [< F. cône, < L. conus, < Gr. kōnos, cone.] coanet; con†.— alluvial cone, a deposit of detritus in the shape of a fan made by a stream; issuing from the mouth of a ravine. alluvial fan†.— antipodal c. (Btol.), a bundle of fibers present in a cell which is undergoing karyokinesis, situated opposite the spindle fibers.— cone'-bear"ing, n. See BEARING, n., 7.— c.-belt, n. A furnace-tube consisting of frustums of cones joined together.— c.-billed, a. Conirostral.— c.-bit, n. See BIT.— c.-cell, n. Histol. A cell in the ommatidium of the compound eyes of insects and crustaceans which secretes crystalline cones.— c.-clutch, n. Mech. A friction-clutch in which the bearings are cone-shaped.— c.-coupling, n. Mech. A coupling consisting of an outer sleeve, into which fit the frusta of two split hollow cones, through which bolts are run longitudinally, the tension on these binding the whole together.— c.-drive, n. A variable-speed mechanism in which two cones of equal slant are placed with their bases in opposite directions on a pair of parallel shafts. A loop of leather surrounding one of the cones provides frictional engagement between the two, whereby one cone may drive the other. By moving this loop toward one end or the other the speed of the driven cone may be increased or diminished. cone'-gear"†.— c.-drum, n. A coniform wheel or pulley.— c.-duster, n. Mech. A cleaning contrivance consisting of a cone-shaped cylinder studded with teeth and made to revolve within a dentigerous cylindrical casing.— c.-gamba, n. An organ-stop with bell-mouthed conical pipes; a bell-gamba.— c.-in-c. I. a. Geol. Consisting of nests of closely packed, intersecting cones found in some fine-grained sedimentary rocks. II. n. A fossil conularioid pteropod.— c.-nose, n. A reduviid bug (genus Conorhinus); as, the blood-sucking cone-nose (C. sanguisugus).— c. of burst, dispersion, or spread (Gunnery), the hypothetical cone embracing the area of the diverging shot or fragments from a shrapnel.— c. of eruption, the cone-shaped mass of detritus and ashes formed at the crater of a volcano.— c. of light, a conical area of light reflected on the drum-membrane. light-spot†; pyramid of light†.— c. of rays, all the rays of light from a particular luminous point that strike a given surface.— c. of shadow (Astron.), the cone-shaped shadow cast by a planet in space. c. of shade†.— c. of the retina, one of the structures found in the outer layer of the retina, apparently Cone-nose Beetle.

Cone of Rays.
a, b, lens; c, cone.

Cone-drive.
a, regulator; b, leather collar by which motion is transmitted from the upper to the lower cone; c, c, sliding rod carrying the collar and regulating the speed; d, d, cones; e, e, shafts; f, f, oil-cups.

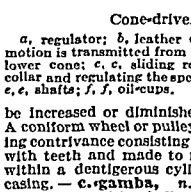
Cone-pulley.



Cone-shells.
1. (Conus marmoreus.)
2. (Conus literatus.)

connected with the sense of vision. See illus. under RODS OF THE RETINA.— c.-plate, n. Mech. An attachable plate, pierced with cone-shaped holes for holding the free end of a piece of lathe-work.— c.-rust, n. 1. A disease of raspberries, due to the fungus Glœosporium venetum. anthrac'nose‡. 2. The red rust of blackberries, due to the fungus Cœoma nitens. — c.-seat, n. That part of a firearm into which the vent-plug is screwed.— c.-shell, n. A conoid univalve mollusk having an obconic shell.— c.-spindle, n. Mech. An axis or shaft bearing a conical pulley or a set of stepped pulleys. — c. stand, a gun-platform shaped like a frustum.— c. wheat. Same as BEARDED WHEAT.— c.-wheel, n. A cone or conical drum or wheel, used in machinery for varying speed in transmitting motion.— equimomental c. (Mech.), a conical surface of a rigid body any vertex of which is given, and which is described by a straight line moving in such a way that all the positions of the rigid body about this line will have the same moment of inertia.— parasitic c., in volcanic regions a supplementary cone caused by a temporary rent. See CONE, n., 4.— pyrometer cones, same as SEGER'S CONES. — Seger's cones, small cones composed of materials of different degrees of fusibility, arranged in a series of 60: used to find approximately the temperature of kilns. Invented by Charles Lauth at Sèvres, and perfected by Seger at Berlin.— stepped c., a so-called cone pulley; a stepped pulley.— tactile c., a coniform shaped elevation in certain trematoids provided with cilia whose function is that of sensation.— torrential c., an alluvial deposit, in the shape of a fan, formed by rivers on land.

Cone-wheel.

Co-ne'cuh, 1 ko-nī'kų; 2 co-nē'cū, n. 1. A river in southern Alabama, 175 m. long to the Escambia. 2. A county in southern Alabama; 831 sq. m.; county-seat, Evergreen.

con"gre-ga'tion-al-ism, 1 kəŋ'gri-gē'shən-əl-izm; 2 kŏŋ'ĝre-ĝā'shon-al-ĭsm, n. 1. The church polity that makes the authority of the local congregation supreme and ultimate within its own domain: sometimes distinguished from independency as acknowledging the right of fellow churches to advise, reprove, and extend or withdraw from fellowship. Not only the Independents of Great Britain and the Congregationalists of the United States, but also Baptist, Unitarian, and other churches, have adopted this form of church polity. Compare BROWNISM. See CHURCH GOVERNMENT, under CHURCH.

2. [C-] The system of belief and practise of the Congregational denomination. 3. In a territorially organized church, congregational practise, such as being attached to or attending a church other than the one in one's own immediate locality, tho of the same denomination; as, the congregationalism within the Church of England.

Con"gre-ga'tion-al-ist, 1 kəŋ'gri-gē'shən-əl-ist; 2 kŏŋ'ĝre-ĝā'shon-al-ĭst, n. 1. A member of an evangelical denomination of Christians, principally of the United States and Great Britain, historically identical with the Independents of the latter country, where they are called by either name. Their polity is congregational and their doctrine usually moderately Calvinistic. 2. [c-] An advocate of or believer in congregationalism. 3. Same as INDEPENDENT, n. (1).

con'gre-ga"tive, } 1 keŋ'gri-gē"tiv; 2 cŏŋ'gre-gā"tiv, a. Char-con'gre-ga"tivˢ, } acterized by tendency to congregate or form assemblies, societies, etc.

con'gress, 1 keŋ'gres; 2 cŏŋ'grĕs, n. 1. An assembly or conference; especially, a formal meeting of persons regarded as representative, for deliberation and discussion; specifically, in politics, a meeting of envoys or others possessing plenipotentiary powers, for arbitration or other settlement of international affairs.

Among the notable congresses of the world are: Aix-la-Chapelle (Oct. 1, 1818), resulting in the withdrawal of the combined forces of Austria, Prussia, Russia, and England from France; Arras (Sept. 21, 1435), between the King of France and the Duke of Burgundy, the latter abandoning his alliance with England; Berlin (June 13–July 13, 1878), the principal European powers establishing the borders of the southeastern states and dependencies of Europe; Carlsbad (Aug. 6, 1819), the German states establishing the censorship of the press and suppressing the Burschenschaft; Chatillon (Feb. 5, 1814), between the Allies and Napoleon, culminating in the breaking off of negotiations, March 19, 1814; Constantinople (Dec. 23, 1876–Jan. 20, 1877), the proposals of the European powers being rejected by Turkey; Frankfort (Sept. 22, 1863, Oct. 1, 1865, and June 14, 1866), terminating in the defeat of a plan for federal reform in the German states; Hague (May 18–July 29, 1899), resulting in the establishment of the Peace tribunal, and (June 15–Oct. 18, 1907), the adoption of a resolution in favor of obligatory arbitration in certain cases; Kongo (1884–1885), convening at Berlin and declaring the neutrality of Kongo Free State; Laibach (Jan. 26, 1821), the principal European nations establishing the right of armed intervention in the case of internal political disturbances; Paris (Jan. 16–Apr. 22, 1856), England, France, and Russia agreeing upon terms of peace at the conclusion of the Crimean war; Ryswick (Sept. 20–Oct. 30, 1697), leading to the agreement between England and France to terminate the wars of Queen Anne; Verona (Oct.–Dec., 1822), the attending representatives of the principal European governments agreeing upon the armed intervention of France in Spain in 1823; and Vienna (Sept., 1814–June, 1815), the monarchs of Austria, Bavaria, Denmark, Prussia, Russia, and the smaller German states settling the affairs of Europe after the Napoleonic wars.

A congress, by the law of nations, is but an appointed meeting for the settlement of affairs between different nations, in which the representatives or agents of each treat and negotiate as they are instructed by their own government. WEBSTER Works, Panama Mission in vol. iii, p. 195. [L. B. & CO. 1858.]

2. [C-] The national legislative body of the United States.

In United States history three bodies have been known as Congress: (1) the Continental Congress (see phrase below); (2) the Federal Congress, or Congress under the Confederation (1781–1789); and (3) the United States Congress, which held its first session beginning March 4, 1789, on the adoption of the Constitution. Congress consists of two houses — the Senate, comprising two members from each State, chosen by the Legislature for terms of six years, and the House of Representatives, elected by the people of the several States for terms of two years, the number of members from a State depending upon its population. See CONGRESSIONAL; REPRESENTATIVE; SENATE.

With an empire to found and to defend, Congress had not as yet had the disposal of one penny of money.
BANCROFT United States vol. iv, epoch iii, p. 204. [A. 1883.]

3. [C-] [U. S.] The body of Senators and Representatives during any period of two years for which the latter are chosen.

Congresses are numbered consecutively. As the first was chosen in 1788 and met in 1789, the number of any Congress may be found by subtracting 1788 from the year of election or 1789 from the year of meeting, dividing by two, and adding one. Thus, the Congress that met first in 1911 was the 62d Congress. Each Congress has two regular sessions, beginning successively on the first Monday in December. The second necessarily ends on March 3, when the Representatives' term of office expires, and is commonly called the "short" session. The Constitution empowers the President to call an extra session of Congress or of either House.

4. The lower house of the legislature of a South-American republic, also of the Cortes, or national legislature of Spain. [< L. congressus, < congressus, pp. of congredior, gather, < con- (< cum), together, + gradior, walk.] SYN.: assembly, convention, convocation, council, diet, legislature, parliament, senate. See ASSEMBLY.

— church congress, an organization for the discussion of matters of church interest; especially, such a body (1) of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, or (2) of the Church of England. — c. boot or gaiter, a half-shoe or gaiter covering the ankle, with rubber material at the side to enable it to be drawn on readily. — C. water, mineral water from the Congress Spring, Saratoga, N. Y. — Continental C. (U. S. Hist.), one of three national legislative bodies. (1) A deliberative body, representing all the colonies but Georgia, which remained as an organization meeting in Philadelphia from Sept. 5, 1774, to Oct. 26, 1774. (2) A body representing the thirteen colonies, which met in Philadelphia on May 10, 1775, and adjourned Dec. 12, 1776. (3) The representative body that met in Baltimore, Dec. 20, 1776, and adjourned March 1, 1781, when the Articles of Confederation went into operation.

— con-gress', vi. [Rare.] 1. To assemble; congregate. 2. To assemble in or be present at a congress. — con-gres'-sion, n. 1. [Rare.] A gathering; an encounter. 2†. Comparison. 3†. Coition. — con-gres'sive(es, a. Tending to assemble, or to come into encounter.

con-gres'sion-al, 1 keŋ-gresh'ən-əl; 2 cŏn-grĕsh'on-al, a. Of or pertaining to congress; relating to, occurring in, or enacted by a congress, especially [C-] the United States Congress. — Congressional district [U. S.], a section of a State entitled to one Representative in Congress under the act of Jan. 16, 1901. The number of districts corresponds to the number of Representatives returned by the State, the ratio being determined by each decennial census. The Congressional districts are more or less uniform in regard to population, tho essentially variable in point of size. — con-gres'sion-al-ist, n. A supporter or adherent of a congress. con-gres'sion-ist‡; con'gress-ist‡.

Con'gress-man, 1 keŋ'gres-man; 2 cŏŋ'grĕs-man, n. [-MEN, pl.] A member of the United States Congress; especially, a member of the House of Representatives.

Con'gress-wo"man, n. A woman member of Congress. Miss Jeannette Rankin, representing Montana, was the first woman in the United States to be elected to Congress (1916).

con'greve[1], 1 keŋ'grīv; 2 cŏŋ'grēv, n. 1. A variety of friction-match, named from its inventor, Sir William Congreve: short for Congreve match. 2. A military rocket, invented by the same in 1808, and called, in full, Congreve rocket.

Con'greve[2], n. 1. William (1670–1/12 1729), an English dramatist; Love for Love, etc. 2. Sir William (1/22 1772–5/12 1828), an English officer; engineer and inventor.

Con'gri-dæ, 1 keŋ'gri-dī; 2 cŏŋ'gri-dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of enchelycephalous eels, especially those with well-developed opercular bones, palatine bones, and preorbitals; congers. [< CONGER[1].] Con-grol'dæ‡; Con-grol'de-ī‡. — con'grid, n.

Con"gro-gad'i-dæ, 1 keŋ"gro-gad'i-dī; 2 cŏŋ"gro-găd'i-dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of anacanthine fishes with submedian anus, ample branchiostegal membrane continuous but free below, and no ventrals. Con"gro-ga'dus, n. (t. g.) [< CONGER[1] + Gr. gados, fish.] — con"gro-ga'did n. — con"gro-ga'doid, a. & n.

con'grold, 1 keŋ'greld; 2 cŏŋ'grōld. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Congridæ. II. n. One of the Congridæ. [< CONGER[1] + -OID.]

con'gru-ence, 1 keŋ'gru-ens; 2 cŏn'grų-ĕnç, n. 1. An act or a condition of agreement or concordance; appropriateness; the conformity of one thing to another. 2. Math. (1) A statement in algebraic language that the difference between two numbers or expressions is divisible by a third number called the modulus. The form is $X \equiv Y \pmod{m.}$, which means that $X - Y$ is divisible by m. (2) Same as CONGRUENCY. 3. [Archaic.] Gram. Syntactical agreement, as of a verb with its subject. 4†. Same as CONGRUITY, 2 (2). [< L. congruentia, < congruen(t-)s; see CONGRUENT.] — con-grue't, vi. To agree.

con'gru-en-cy, 1 keŋ'gru-en-sı; 2 cŏŋ'grų-ĕn-çy, n. [-CIES, 1 -sız; 2 -çiş, pl.] 1. Same as CONGRUENCE, 1. 2. Math. A complex of lines that fulfil two conditions; as, all the possible tangents common to two spheres are a congruency. 3. Logic. The relation of two predicates that can be affirmed of the same subject.

con'gru-ent, 1 keŋ'gru-ent; 2 cŏŋ'grų-ĕnt, a. Having mutual agreement or conformity; correspondent; appropriate. Specif.: (1) Math. (a) Filling exactly the same space; concurrent: applied to figures or solids. (b) Leaving the same remainder when divided by a modulus. See CONGRUENCE, 2 (1). (2) Logic. Having to do with or predicable of the same subject; different from each other, yet true of the same state of things; as, congruent propositions. (3) Gram. Agreeing syntactically. (4) Anat. Fitting into one another: said of opposing joints. (5) Same as CONGRUOUS, 2 (2). [< L. congruen(t-)s, ppr. of congruo, agree.] — con'gru-en'tial, a. Pertaining to congruences. — con'gru-ent-ly, adv.

con'gru-ism, 1 keŋ'gru-izm; 2 cŏŋ'grų-ĭşm, n. Theol. The doctrine that the efficacy of the grace of God is dependent on and determined by the adaptation of the divine grace to the character, disposition, and will of the person receiving it: especially advocated in the 16th century. — con'gru-ist, n. Ch. Hist. A believer in congruism. — con'gru-is'tic, a. Relating to congruism.

con-gru'i-ty, 1 keŋ-grū'i-ti; 2 cŏn-grų'i-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiş, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being congruous; logical or practical agreement; harmoniousness; appropriateness.

The expressiveness of it [imagery] is measured by its congruity.
AUSTIN PHELPS English Style lect. x, p. 140. [S. 1888.]

2. Theol. (1) That receptivity of divine grace assumed in congruism. (2) With the schoolmen, a meritorious fitness for or claim upon the first exercise of divine grace arising from desires or strivings after good. 3. An example or case of harmoniousness or agreement. 4†. Gram. Agreement. 5†. Geom. Equality. [< F. congruité, < L. congruus; see CONGRUOUS.] SYN.: see HARMONY.

con'gru-ous, 1 keŋ'gru-us; 2 cŏŋ'grų-ŭs, a. 1. Harmoniously related or united; marked by adaptation or agreement; appropriate; consistent.

Impelled by a species of moral gravitation, the inquirer will glide insensibly to the system which is congruous to his disposition.
LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. ii, p. 204. [A. 1873.]

2. (1) Math. Having congruence. (2) Geom. That may be superposed so as to be exactly coincident. [< L. congruus, < congruo, agree.] SYN.: see APPROPRIATE. — con'gru-ous-ly, adv. — con'gru-ous-ness, n.

con'gu, n. Same as CONGOU.

con-hy'drin, } 1 ken-hai'drin, -drın or -drĭn; 2 cŏn-hȳ'- con-hy'drine, } drin, -drin or -drĭn, n. Chem. A white poisonous crystalline alkaloid ($C_8H_{17}NO$) contained in the seeds and leaves of the poison-hemlock. [< CONIUM + HYDROGEN.]

co'ni[1], 1 kō'nai; 2 cō'nī, n. Plural of CONUS.

Co'ni[2], 1 kō'ni; 2 cō'ni, n. See CUNEO.

co'ni-a, 1 kō'ni-ə; 2 cō'ni-a, n. Same as CONIN.

co'ni-ack"er, 1 kō'ni-ak"ər; 2 cō'ni-ăk"er, n. [Slang, U. S.] A counterfeiter; counterfeit.

Co-ni'ah, 1 ko-nai'ə; 2 co-ni'a, n. Bib. Jer. xxii, 24.

con'ic, 1 ken'ik; 2 cŏn'ic, a. 1. Having the form of a cone; cone-shaped; conical. 2. Relating to or formed by or upon a cone. [< Gr. kōnikos, < kōnos, peak.] — conic section, a curve formed by the intersection of a plane with a right circular cone; a curve of the second degree; an ellipse, parabola, or hyperbola, according to the inclination of the cutting plane to the axis. See illus. — c. sections, that branch of geometry which treats of the ellipse, parabola, and hyperbola. — c. surface, the surface of a cone.

Conic Sections.
1. Circle. 2. Parabola. 3. Hyperbola. 4. Ellipse. 5. Right lines.

The eccentricity of a conic is determined by its form. C. A. YOUNG Elements of Astronomy § 257, p. 178. [G. & CO. 1890.]

— conjugate conics (Geom.), two concentric conics having the respective polars of any point parallel and at an equal distance from a common center. — general conic (Geom.), the locus determined by the general equation of the second degree between two variables: $Ax^2 + 2Hxy + By^2 + 2Gx + 2Fy + C = 0$. — harmonic conics (Math.), two conics, in whose equations the sum of the products of the corresponding coefficients is 0. — particular c., the curve derived from the general equation for conics, by assigning certain conditions.

con'i-cal, 1 ken'i-kəl; 2 cŏn-i-cal, a. Shaped like a cone; conic.

That [root] of the carrot, which is thick at the base and tapers gradually to the apex, is called conical.
E. S. BASTIN Elements of Botany pt. i, p. 7. [G. P. P. 1888.]

— con"i-cal'i-ty, n. The property of being conical. con'i-cal-ness‡; co-nic'i-ty‡. — con'i-cal-ly, adv.

Con'i-cal Peak. A mountain in Montana; 10,737 ft. high.

con"i-ce'in, } 1 ken'i-sı'in; 2 cŏn'i-çē'in, n. Chem. Any of con"i-ce'ine, } a number of synthetic alkaloids ($C_8H_{15}N$), similar in composition to conyrin and conin.

con"i-chal'cite, 1 ken'i-kal'sait; 2 cŏn'i-căl'çit, n. Mineral. A green, hydrous, calcium-copper arsenate, $(CuCa)_2As_2O_8.(CuCa)O_2H_2.^1/_2H_2O$, occurring massive and reniform. [< L. konia, powdered lime, + chalcites; see CHALCITES.]

con'i-cle, 1 ken'i-kl; 2 cŏn'i-cl, n. A little cone.

con'i-co-, 1 ken'i-ko-; 2 cŏn'i-co-. From Greek kōnos, pine-tree or pine-cone: a combining form. — con"i-co-a-cute', a. Conical with a very sharp point. — conico-cylindrical, a. Nearly cylindrical but tapering. — conico-elongate, a. Conical and elongated.

con'i-co-graph, } 1 ken'i-ko-graf; 2 cŏn'i-co-grăf, n. An con'i-co-grafˢ, } instrument for describing conic sections. [< CONICO- + -GRAPH.] — con"i-co-hem"i-spher'i-cal, a. Nearly hemispherical but somewhat conical.

con'i-coid, 1 ken'i-keid; 2 cŏn'i-cŏid, n. Math. A quadric surface, or one of the second degree. [< CONIC + -OID.]

con"i-co-o'vate, a. Conically ovate.

con"i-cop'o-ly, 1 ken'i-kəp'o-lai; 2 cŏn'i-cŏp'o-lȳ, n. [Anglo-Ind.] A native accountant or clerk in the presidency of Madras. can"a-cop'o-ly‡; can-cop'ly‡.

con"i-co-sub-u'late, a. Sharply conical.

con'ics, 1 ken'iks; 2 cŏn'ics, n. That part of geometry which relates to conic sections.

Con'i-dæ, 1 ken'i-dī; 2 cŏn'i-dē, n. pl. Conch. A family of toxoglossate gastropods, especially those with an obconic shell: the cones. See illus. of CONE-SHELL. [< CONUS.]

co-nid'i-um, 1 ko-nid'i-um; 2 co-nid'i-ŭm, n. [-I-A, pl.] Bot. In fungi, an asexually produced propagative cell or spore borne upon special branches of the thallus. [< Gr. konis, dust.] con'id‡; co-nid'i-o-spore‡. — co-nid'i-al, a. Bot. 1. Pertaining to or of the nature of conidia; conidioid. 2. Conidiferous. co-nid'i-ant‡. — co-nid"i-if'er-ous, a. Bot. Bearing conidia. co-nid"i-oph'o-rous‡. — co-nid'i-oid, a. Bot. Like a conidium. — co-nid'i-o-phore, n. Bot. A branch of the mycelium in fungi that bears conidia.

con'i-fer, 1 ken'i-fər; 2 cŏn'i-fer, n. Bot. A plant of the pine family (Pinales): so called from its bearing cones. [L., < conus, CONE, + fero, bear.]

Co-nif'er-æ, 1 ko-nif'ər-i; 2 co-nif'er-ē, n. pl. Bot. A group of resinous mostly evergreen gymnospermous trees now constituting the order Pinales. See GINKGOACEÆ, PINACEÆ, and TAXACEÆ.

In the middle geological ages, Coniferæ are introduced, the first flowering plant known on earth.
AGASSIZ Geol. Sketches sketch iii, p. 78. [T. & T. 1866.]

co-nif'er-in, 1 ko-nif'ər-in; 2 co-nif'er-ĭn, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_{16}H_{22}O_8 + 2H_2O$) found in the sap of coniferous trees.

co-nif'er-ous, 1 ko-nif'ər-us; 2 co-nif'er-ŭs, a. Cone-bearing; of or belonging to the Pinales; containing or composed of conifers; as, coniferous forests.

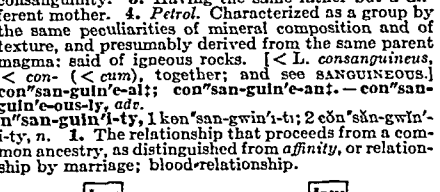
con"san-guin'e-ous, 1 ken'san-gwin'ı-us; 2 cŏn'săn-gwin'e-ŭs, a. 1. Of the same blood; descended from the same parent or ancestor; akin. 2. Of or pertaining to consanguinity. 3. Having the same father but a different mother. 4. Petrol. Characterized as a group by the same peculiarities of mineral composition and of texture, and presumably derived from the same parent magma: said of igneous rocks. [< L. consanguineus, < con- (< cum), together; and see SANGUINEOUS.] con"san-guin'e-al†; con"san-guin'e-an†.— con"san-guin'e-ous-ly, adv.

con"san-guin'i-ty, 1 ken'san-gwin'ı-tı; 2 cŏn'săn-gwin'i-ty, n. 1. The relationship that proceeds from a common ancestry, as distinguished from affinity, or relationship by marriage; blood-relationship.



In lineal consanguinity each generation counts as a degree, both in civil and in canon law. Collateral consanguinity is reckoned thus: In canon law the steps between the common ancestor and the remoter person are counted. Thus, uncle and nephew are related in the 2d degree, because the nephew, as grandson, is two degrees from the common ancestor. The nephew is also in the 2d degree from his uncle's child, who is his first cousin, and in the 3d degree from his cousin's child, who is his first cousin once removed. The canon-law computation is in use in England and in most of the States of the United States. (See diagram A.) In the civil law the degrees from the common ancestor are numbered on both sides; thus, brothers, being each one remove, are related in the 2d degree instead of in the first, first cousins in the 4th instead of the 2d degree, and second cousins in the 6th instead of the 3d degree. See diagram B.

2. Genetic affinity in general, as of rocks. 3. Figuratively, any near affinity or relationship. [< L. consanguinita(t-)s, < consanguineus; see CONSANGUINEOUS.]

SYN.: see AFFINITY; KIN.

— collateral consanguinity, the kinship of those who descend from one and the same common ancestor, but do not descend one from the other, as brother and sister, nephew and cousin.— lineal c., kinship subsisting between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as the son, the father, the grandfather.

con-sar"ci-na'tion†, n. A piecing together; patchwork.

con'science, 1 ken'shens; 2 cŏn'shĕnç, n. 1. Ethics. Moral consciousness in general; the activity or faculty by which distinctions are made between the right and wrong in conduct and character; the act or power of moral discrimination; ethical judgment or sensibility.

Different writers have emphasized either the intuitive elements, and so made conscience a native and unerring faculty of moral perception; or the affective and emotional elements, thus making it a sort of "taste-faculty"; or the practical side, as a sort of mandate to the will. In the same connection has arisen the debate how far conscience is capable of education and development; and what is the fundamental principle regulating its sense of obligation. In its proper comprehensive use, the word conscience covers everything in man's nature that has to do with the decision and direction of moral conduct.

A conscience is needed for the age, as for the individual—a power that shall reveal it to itself, and arouse and convict it.
JOHN YOUNG Christ of History bk. ii, pt. ii, p. 73. [C. & BROS. 1860.]

2. Conviction of right or duty; conformity in conduct to one's views of right and wrong, or to the moral standard; scrupulosity; as, a man of conscience. 3. Same as BREASTPLATE, 3. 4. [Archaic.] Consciousness. 5†. Inner thoughts or sentiments. 6†. Pity. [F., < L. conscientia, < con- (< cum), together; and see SCIENCE.] — conscience clause, a clause in a law which specially relieves persons who have conscientious scruples from performing acts enjoined therein: referring generally to laws relating to religious matters, but in Great Britain also applying to the Compulsory Vaccination Acts.— con'science-mon"ey, n. Money secretly paid to atone for some concealed act of dishonesty: in Great Britain understood as referring to income tax unrighteously withheld.— c.-proof, a.— c.-smitten, a.— court of c. [U. K.], a court for the recovery of small debts; superseded in England by the county court, but still existing in Ireland.— in c. 1. In truth: in reason and honesty.; 2. Certainly; assuredly.— con'-sclenced, a. Having a conscience.— con'science-less, a.

Con"scl"ence', 1 kōn'si'ãns'; 2 cŏn'si'ãnç', Henri (¹²/₁ 1812–⁹/₁₀1883). A Belgian novelist who revived Flemish literature; Lion of Flanders, etc.

con"sci-en'tious, 1 ken'si-[or -shi-]en'shus; 2 cŏn'si-[or -shi-]ĕn'shŭs, a. 1. Governed by conscience: obedient to the dictates of conscience; as, a conscientious workman. 2. Dictated by conscience; regulated by conscience; as, conscientious dealings.

Nothing short of the most rigorous accuracy could satisfy his [Newton's] conscientious regard for truth. O. M. MITCHEL Planetary and Stellar Worlds p. 124. [O. M. & CO. 1870.]

3†. Conscious. [< LL. conscientiosus, < L. conscientia; see CONSCIENCE.] — con"sci-en'tious-ly, adv. In a conscientious manner; as a matter of conscience.— con"sci-en'tious-ness, n. The quality of being conscientious; loyalty to conscience or duty.

con'scion-a-bl(e*r*, 1 ken'shən-ə-bl; 2 cŏn'shon-a-bl, a. 1. Conformable to conscience or to right or duty; just: most common in the negative; as, your demands are not conscionable. Compare UNCONSCIONABLE. 2†. Conscientious. [< CONSCIENCE.] con'scion-a-bl(e-ness†, n. [Rare.] — con'scion-a-bly, adv.

con'scious, 1 ken'shus; 2 cŏn'shŭs, a. Immediately aware of; mentally recognizing, to some degree and extent, one's own life of feeling and thought, or its objective reference. As improperly limited by some writers, self-conscious.

Ye were as living conscious beings, then, With whom I talked.
R. H. DANA, SR. Changes of Home st. 5.

2. Embarrassed by the sense of one's own individuality; self-conscious.

At those high words, we, conscious of ourselves, Perused the matting. TENNYSON Princess ii, st. 4.

3. Mentally alert; well aware of some object, impression, or truth.

Each man is conscious that his individuality continues, altho he passes from one Kingdom into the next.
I. K. FUNK Next Step in Evolution p. 46. [F. & W. '02.]

4. Present in the mind; recognized as belonging to oneself; as, conscious superiority. 5. Cognizant of guilt or fault. 6. Deliberate; as, a conscious lie. 7. Pertaining to consciousness. 8. Philos. Having the faculty and psychical attributes of consciousness. 9. [Archaic. or Obs.] Possessing knowledge in common with another; mutually informed. [< L. conscius, < conscio, know, < con- (< cum), with, + scio, know.] con'sclent† [Rare]. SYN.: aware, sensible. One is aware of that which exists without him; he is conscious of the inner workings of his own mind. Sensible may be used in the exact sense of conscious, or it may partake of both the senses mentioned above. One may be sensible of his own or another's error; he is conscious only of his own. Sensible has often a reference to the emotions where conscious might apply only to the intellect; to say a culprit is sensible of his degradation is more forcible than to say he is conscious of it. See AWARE.— ANT.: cold, dead, deaf, ignorant, insensible, unconscious.— PREP.: of.— con'scious-ly, adv.

con'scious-ness, 1 ken'shus-nes; 2 cŏn'shŭs-nĕs, n. 1. The immediate awareness of an object, whether internal state or external thing, which belongs to all mental life; the activity of mind that characterizes being awake as distinguished from being in a deep sleep or swoon; faculty or condition of being conscious.

We . . . are by no means disposed to deny that the inferior animals . . . may have consciousness, that they may be said to think and love.
MATTHEW ARNOLD God and the Bible ch. 1, p. 38. [MACM. 1875.]

2. The awareness of some particular object, state, agency, or influence; an intuition, inward feeling, or unreasoned conviction, as consciousness of danger; consciousness of opposition. 3. Any general aspect of mental life or phase of thought and feeling as considered from a special point of view; as, the moral consciousness.

JOSEPH COOK Conscience lect. viii, p. 218. [H. M. & CO. 1884.]

4. Any form of intellectual activity or its product in direct and convincing knowledge, whether of external or internal objects; as, in Sir Wm. Hamilton's use of the word as "a comprehensive term for the complement of all our cognitive energies." 5. Psychol. (1) The psychical in general, including all forms of sensation, perception, feeling, planning, and thought. (2) The cognitive faculty in its more immediate and direct, or intuitive, forms. (3) Self-consciousness, or the immediate awareness of one's own feelings, ideas, and volitions.

The meaning of the word consciousness, as used by writers on psychology, has varied greatly, but may be roughly classified under the three groups given above. It is the accompaniment and condition of all mental life, and for this reason is, ultimately considered, strictly undefinable.

For practical purposes, nevertheless, and limiting the meaning of the word consciousness to the personal self of the individual, we can pretty confidently answer the question prefixed to this paragraph by saying that the cortex is the sole organ of consciousness in man. If there be any consciousness pertaining to the lower centres, it is a consciousness of which the self knows nothing. WM. JAMES Psychology vol. I, p. 67. [H. H. & CO. '10.]

Is there a truly psychical phenomenon, an occurrence of real mental life, anywhere; then such phenomenon is a phenomenon of consciousness, an occurrence in consciousness.
G. T. LADD Psych. Descrip. and Explan., p. 30. [s. '09.]

6. The aggregate of the conscious states in a single organism or a group of persons: a collective term for those forms of mental life common to a number of individuals; as, mob consciousness; consciousness of race. 7. Embarrassment from the sense of one's own individuality and the observation of others; self-consciousness. 8. [Rare.] Cognizance of guilt or fault. Syn.: see FEELING. Compare CONSCIOUS.

—action consciousness (Psychol.), consciousness immediately before, during, and immediately after the doing of an action.—association or associative c. (Psychol.), consciousness during an associative reaction.—cosmic c., hypothetical consciousness pervading the universe.—disaggregation of c., a partial or complete division of consciousness into several consciousnesses as exemplified by individuals in states simulating several personalities.—double c., a condition of somnambulistic or otherwise double life in which what happens to the individual in one state of consciousness is usually very imperfectly recalled in the other state.—field of c. (Psychol.), the entire number of objects, more or less attended to at one time, and conceived of after the analogy of a certain area or field of vision. Within the so-called field some objects are figuratively said to lie within the focal point of attention, while others are distributed about this point in the "fringes," or outskirts, of the field.—principle of the economy of c., the doctrine that in the process of understanding the mind recalls no more than it needs for the occasion.—reaction c. (Psychophys.), the conscious process which goes on directly before, during, and after a reaction experiment. [bound; confine; restrict.

con-script', 1 kŏn-skript'; 2 cŏn-script', vt. force into military service; draft; enlist.

Conscript is an instance of persistent popular usage working backward to make a new verb from a noun, when the original verb is equally available. Our verb should be conscribe, and our noun conscript.

con'se-quence, 1 kŏn'sı-kwens; 2 cŏn'se-kwĕnç, n. 1. That which naturally flows from a preceding action or condition; the effect of a cause; result. 2. Logic. The conclusion of a syllogism; inference; deduction. 3. The relation between an antecedent and a consequent; causal or logical consecution; sequence. 4. Importance. (1) Distinction; note: applied to persons; as, a man of consequence. (2) Significance; moment: applied to things; as, an event of little consequence. (3) Self-importance; consequentiality: used of persons. 5. pl. A game in which each player contributes one item of a story, without knowing what the others have given, the conclusion stating the consequences, and the whole forming an amusing jumble. 6. Astron. Motion from west to east among the signs of the zodiac, as of the sun; also, easterly position. [< L. consequentia, < consequen(t-)s; see CONSEQUENT.]

Syn.: consequent, effect, end, event, issue, outcome, outgrowth, result. Effect is the strongest of these words; it is that which is directly produced by the action of an efficient cause; thus, we say, "Every effect must have an adequate cause" (see CAUSE). In regard to human actions, effect commonly relates to intention; as, the shot took effect, i. e., the effect intended. A consequence is that which follows an act naturally, but less directly than the effect. The motion of the piston is the effect, and the agitation of the water under the paddle-wheels a consequence of the expansion of steam in the cylinder. The result is, literally, the rebound of an act, depending on many elements; the issue is that which flows forth directly; we say the issue of a battle, the result of a campaign. A consequent commonly is that which follows simply in order of time, or by logical inference. The end is the actual outcome without determination of its relation to what has gone before; it is ordinarily viewed as either the necessary, natural, or logical outcome, any effect, consequence, or result being termed an end; as, the end of such a course must be ruin. The event (L. e, out, and vento, come) is primarily exactly the same in meaning as outcome; but in use it is more nearly equivalent to upshot, signifying the sum and substance of all effects, consequences, and results of a course of action. See ACCIDENT; EVENT; INFERENCE; ANTECEDENT, a.; CIRCUMSTANCE.—as a consequence, in consequence, as a result; because; therefore.—in c. of, as the result of; because of.

con'se-quent, 1 kŏn'sı-kwent; 2 cŏn'se-kwĕnt, a. 1. Following as a natural result, as a necessary effect, or as a logical conclusion; as, excitement and consequent confusion; an inference consequent on given premises. 2. Characterized by correctness of reasoning; logical.

Spinoza is very consequent; the strong, says he, are made to enslave the feeble, by the same title that big fish devour little ones.
BARING-GOULD Origin of Relig. Belief p. 60. [s. 1878.]

3. Geol. (1) Pertaining to or characterizing the earth-movements which result from the external transfer of material in the process of gradation: contrasted with antecedent. (2) Having a course or direction depending on or resulting from the original slope of the surface; as, consequent drainage: contrasted with inconsequent, antecedent, and superimposed (epigenetic). 4†. Subsequent. [OF., < L. consequen(t-)s, ppr. of consequor, < con- (< cum), together, + sequor, follow.]—consequent points or points, points at which the attraction in a magnet is at the maximum intermediate between the poles.

—con'se-quent-ly, adv. 1. As a consequence; therefore. 2. In a consequent or logical manner. 3†. Subsequently.—con'se-quent-ness, n. The state or quality of being consequent or logical.

con'se-quent, n. 1. Logic. The second member of a hypothetical proposition; also, the conclusion of an inference or syllogism; consequence. See ANTECEDENT. 2. Mus. The answer to a fugue-subject or to any subject for imitation. 3. Math. In a ratio, the second term; in a series of four proportionals, the second and fourth terms: opposed to antecedent. 4. [Rare.] The result; outcome. 5. That which follows something else, as in order, relation, time, etc., without causal connection: opposed to antecedent. Syn.: see CONSEQUENCE.

con"se-quen'tial, 1 kŏn'sı-kwen'shal; 2 cŏn'se-kwĕn'shal, a. 1. Having or showing a feeling of one's own importance; self-important. 2. Flowing from a cause or following logically from an antecedent; of the nature of a consequence or sequel; following; resulting; consequent; as, consequential responsibilities; consequential (opposed to categorical) contradiction.

The reign . . . of James the Second brought on a crisis, and the revolution of 1688 was the consequential re-action. I. D'ISRAELI Amenities of Lit., A Crisis in vol. i, p. 368. [w. j. w. 1866.]

3. Having social consequence. 4. [Archaic.] Important. 5†. Conclusive. [< L. consequentia; see CONSEQUENCE.]—consequential damages (Law), damages arising indirectly from an injury caused by another's act or neglect.—con"se-quen'tial, n. An inference; deduction.—-ly, adv.—-ness, n.—con"se-quen"ti-al'i-ty, n.

con-serv'a-bl(eP, 1 kŏn-sûrv'a-bl; 2 cŏn-sĕrv'a-bl, a. That may be conserved or preserved.

con-ser'van-cy, 1 kŏn-sûr'van-sı; 2 cŏn-sĕr'van-cy, n. 1. The act of conserving; preservation: usually official; as, the conservancy of fisheries. 2. A board or commission to conserve fisheries, waterways, etc. [< LL. conservantia, < L. conserran(t-)s; see CONSERVANT.] con-ser'va-cy†.

con-ser'vant, 1 kŏn-sûr'vant; 2 cŏn-sĕr'vant, a. Conserving; preservative. [< L. conserran(t-)s; ppr. of conservo; see CONSERVATIVE.]—con'ser-vate, n. [Rare.] To preserve; conserve.

con"ser-va'tion, 1 kŏn"sər-vē'shən; 2 cŏn"ser-vā'shon, n. 1. The act of keeping or protecting from loss or injury; as, the conservation of health, or of social order. 2. The preservation of natural resources for economical use; specif., the preservation of forests, fisheries, rivers, harbors, and the like. See CONSERVANCY.

Conservation as an economic and political term has come to mean the preservation of our natural resources for economical use, so as to secure the greatest good to the greatest number.
WILLIAM H. TAFT Speech before Conservation Congress St. Paul, Sept. 5, '10, quoted from N. Y. Times, Sept. 6, '10, p. 7, col. 1.

3. The process of conserving, as fruit, etc. [< L. conservatio(n-), < conservo; see CONSERVATIVE.] con"ser-va'cion†.—conservation of areas, the description of equal areas in equal times by the radius vector in elliptic motion, as of a planet.—c. of energy, the doctrine that the sum total of the energy of the universe neither diminishes nor increases, tho it may assume different forms successively: sometimes improperly called conservation of force. See ENERGY.—faculty of c. (Psychol.), the power of retaining, as contrasted with that of reproducing or recalling, knowledge; also, memory in the wide sense.—law of the c. of mass (Physics), the law that the total mass of any system is unaffected by any changes taking place within such mass.—law of the c. of matter (Physics), the law that matter, as such, is indestructible and that the total quantity of it in the universe remains the same, regardless of the innumerable transformations and permutations constantly taking place in its component elements. Compare CONSERVATION OF ENERGY.—National C. Commission, a commission appointed by President Roosevelt, June 8, 1908, which prepared the first inventory of the entire natural resources of the United States in waterways, lands, forests, and minerals, with a view to their conservation and utilization.—North American C. Conference, a conference of representatives of the United States, Canada, Mexico, and Newfoundland, convened on the invitation of President Roosevelt, which referred the question of conservation and utilization of natural resources to the decision of a World C. Conference.—con"ser-va'tion-al, a. Of or tending to conservation.

con-ser'va-tism, 1 kŏn-sûr'va-tizm; 2 cŏn-sĕr'va-tĭşm, n. 1. Conservative principles, as in criticism, theology, etc.; disposition or tendency to be conservative. 2. [C-] Politics. The doctrines and policy of the Conservative party; also, indisposition to political change; in English politics, Toryism.

England lost her American Colonies through her blind conservatism and through the domineering, greedy, and insular egotism of her old Colonial system. Westminster Review Aug., 1891, p. 116.

con-ser'va-tist, 1 kŏn-sûr'va-tist; 2 cŏn-sĕr'va-tist. [Rare.] I. a. Of or pertaining to conservatism. II. n. A person disposed to conservatism or conservation.

Prior to the reign of Edward III. they were of two classes: (1) ex-officio conservators, as the judges, and (2) those with restricted jurisdiction as wardens. The latter class has been superseded by the modern justice of the peace. In the United States the judges and similar officials are conservators, and under the Constitution of Delaware the Senators and Congressmen, with many executive officers, are specifically nominated conservators of the peace for that State. — c. trucis (Eng. Law), an officer formerly appointed by the crown to investigate all treasonable offenses against the king's peace arising within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports. His duty was to decide such cases "according to the ancient maritime law then practised in the admiral's court as may arise upon the high seas, and with two associates to determine those arising upon land." BLACKSTONE. — con'ser-va"trix, n. A female conservator.

con-sis'to-ry, 1 kon-sis'to-rı or kon'sıs-to-rı; 2 cŏn-sĭs'to-ry or cŏn'sis-to-ry (XIII), n. [-RIES, 1 -rız; 2 -ris, pl.] 1. A court or authoritative assembly; especially, an ecclesiastical court. Specif.: (1) The lowest court of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, corresponding to the Presbyterian session. (2) A higher court in the Reformed (French) Church, corresponding to a presbytery. (3) A senate at Rome, composed of all the cardinals and usually presided over by the Pope.

The name consistory has come to be applied almost exclusively to meetings of the college of cardinals with the pope as president, formerly for deliberative purposes, but nowadays purely formal. These meetings used to be frequent, but are now held very seldom, taking place only three or four times a year. . . . There are three kinds of consistory: the secret consistory, in which only the cardinals take part; the public consistory, to which are admitted persons from outside and a fairly large audience; and finally, the semi-public consistory, in which the bishops present in Rome take part with the cardinals, and are allowed to state their opinion. Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. vi, p. 978.

(4) A court of the Lutheran state churches, appointed by the government to oversee ecclesiastical affairs. (5) A diocesan court of the Church of England, presided over by the chancellor or commissary of the diocese. con-sols′, 1 ken-selz′; 2 cŏn-sŏlş′ (XIII), n. pl. Finance. A contraction of "consolidated annuities," a governmental security of Great Britain. In 1751 a large part of the public debt, nine separate loans, being in the form of annuities, was consolidated in a 3 per cent. bond or stock. In 1888 the 3 per cents were converted into $2^3/_4$ per cents, which rate in 1903 was reduced to $2^1/_2$ per cent. These stocks now constitute about 80 per cent. of the debt of Great Britain, and their price is regarded as a gage of the national credit. About 10 per cent. of these consols are in the form of certificates or bonds, 90 per cent. being "inscribed on the books" of the Bank of England.

con′so-lute, 1 ken′so-lūt; 2 cŏn′so-lūt, a. Phys. Chem. Soluble in two or more immiscible solvents which are brought in contact with one another. [< CON- + SOLUTE, a.] con″som-mé′, 1 kōn′so-mē′; 2 cŏn′so-mę′, n. [F.] A clear strong concentrated soup of meat and vegetables.

con′so-nance, 1 ken′so-nans; 2 cŏn′so-nanç, n. 1. The state or quality of being consonant, agreed, or in accord with; as, the consonance of a doctrine with the Scriptures.

The meaning of the whole sentence will become plainer by an arrangement more in consonance with our own idiom. ANTHON Homer's Iliad p. 285, note. [H. 1855.]

2. The induced vibration of one sonorous body acting in sympathy with another, as of one piano-string with another. 3. Mus. The pleasant agreement of sounds; concord. Musical consonance arises from various degrees of coincidence between the vibrations of tones: in the unison there is complete coincidence; in the octave every second vibration of the upper note begins at the same time with one of the lower; in the fifth, every third; in the fourth, every fourth; in the major sixth, every fifth, and also in the major third, but with a different ratio; in the minor third, every sixth; in the minor sixth, every eighth. The time-ratios between the higher and the lower vibrations in these consonances are $^1/_1$, $^2/_1$, $^3/_2$, $^4/_3$, $^5/_3$, $^5/_4$, $^6/_5$, and $^8/_5$. When the coincidence does not follow any of these laws, the consonance is imperfect. See INTERVAL. 4. Physics. Resonance. [< L. consonantia, < consonan(t-)s; see CONSONANT, a.] con′so-nan-cyt. Syn.: see HARMONY.

con′so-nant, 1 ken′so-nant; 2 cŏn′so-nant, a. 1. Being in agreement or harmony with; consistent: before to or with.

What she [New England] has done has been consonant to her view of the general good. WEBSTER Works, First Speech on Foot's Res. in vol. iii, p. 265. [L. B. & CO. 1858.]

2. In music, having the quality of consonance. 3. Resembling in sound; as, consonant words. 4. Consonantal. 5. Physics. Resonant. [< L. consonan(t-)s, ppr. of consono, agree, < con-, together, + sono, sound.] con′so-naunfet; con′so-noust. Syn.: see ACCORDANT. — Prep.: to or with; preferably with. — -ly, adv. — -ness, n.

con′so-nant, n. A speech sound resulting from a local interference with the vocal current, or a letter denoting such a sound. In uttering a vowel the oral passage is more open, so that there is no stoppage or audible friction. Notwithstanding the etymology (see below), most of the consonants can be uttered quite easily without a vowel. They are classified with reference (1) to the place of interference, as 'guttural,' 'palatal,' etc.; (2) to the degree or quality of the interference, as 'mutes' ('stops,' 'explosives') and 'continuants,' including 'spirants,' 'liquids,' 'nasals,' etc.; (3) as 'voiced' ('sonant') or 'voiceless' ('surd'), according as the vocal cords are tense and vibrant, or lax and inactive. See under B, C, D, etc. [< L. consonan(t-)s, consonant, orig. sounding with (a vowel); see CONSONANT, a.] — fan consonant (Phon.), a consonant the pronunciation of which requires that the tongue be spread out more than is usual in expressing analogous sounds: such as s in Arabic sabbāh, swimmer, in comparison with s in sabāh, dawn. — Ramist consonants, the letters j and v, being first differentiated by the logician Ramus from the vowels i and u in French writings. — con″so-nan′tal, a. Pertaining to a consonant. con″so-nan′tict [Rare.] — con′so-nant-ism, n. 1. The employment of consonants. 2. The order of consonants pertaining to any language. 3. A consonantal arrangement. — con′so-nant-ize, tt. To make a consonant of (a vowel); render consonantal. con′so-nant-isęt.

con′so-nate, 1 ken′so-nēt; 2 cŏn′so-nāt, tt. [Rare.] To sound in sympathy (with another sounding body).

con′sone, 1 ken′sōn; 2 cŏn′sōn, tt. [Rare.] To be consonant to or with something. [< CON- + L. sono, sound.]

con″so-nil″i-ca′tion, 1 ken′so-nil′ı-kē′shən; 2 cŏn′so-nil′i-cā′shon, n. [Rare.] The act of turning into a consonant, or the state of being consonantal. [< CONSONANT + L. facio, make.]

con′so-pitet, tt. To lull to sleep. con-so′pi-atet. — con-so″pi-a′tiont, n. A lulling asleep. con″so-pi′tiont. — con′so-pitet, a. Calm; composed.

Law.* One who agrees with others to cooperate in accomplishing some unlawful purpose, or to effect a lawful purpose by unlawful means; especially, a confederate with others to inflict wrong and injury on some one, as by agreeing together to accuse another of a punishable crime. [LL., < L. conspiratus, pp. of conspiro; see CONSPIRE.] — con-spir″a-to′ri-al, a. Of or pertaining to conspiracy or conspirators. con-spir′a-to-ryt. — con-spir′a-tress, n. fem.

con-spire′, 1 ken-spair′; 2 cŏn-spĭr′, v. [CON-SPIRED′; CON-SPIR′ING.] I. t. To plot; scheme for; as, to conspire one's death. II. i. 1. To join in or form a conspiracy; combine secretly in an illegal enterprise, especially in treason; join in an unlawful plot. 2. To concur in action or endeavor: said of both things and persons; as, winds, currents, everything conspired against us.

The arts of Greece, and the wealth of Asia, had conspired to erect that sacred and magnificent structure [the temple of Diana]. GIBBON Rome vol. i, ch. 10, p. 313. [P. S. & CO. 1852.]

con spi′ri-to, 1 kōn spi′rı-to; 2 cŏn spĭ′rĭ-to. [It.] Mus. With spirit; vivacious and with fire.

Const., abbr. Constable; Constantine; constitution; constitutional.

con′sta-bl(eᵘᴿ, 1 kun′sta-bl; 2 cŏn′sta-bl, n. 1. In the United States, an officer whose duty it is to maintain the peace, arrest offenders, serve writs, execute warrants, etc. Called in England police constable. In England constables of hundreds, high constables, or chief constables were appointed by the court-leet or the justices at quarter-sessions, and had oversight of the petty or parish constables within their districts. They are now superseded by the county police or constabulary, the head of which is known as chief constable. 2. A high officer, chiefly military, in medieval monarchies; also, formerly, the keeper or governor of a castle. [< OF. conestable, < LL. conestabulus, < L. comes stabuli, lit., 'count of the stable': see COUNT², n., and STABLE, n.] — Constable of France, formerly the highest crown official, commanding the army and acting as judge in all matters relating to chivalry or the army. Napoleon I. revived the title, which had been in abeyance since 1627, but since the fall of the First Empire it has been allowed to lapse. — Heredi- tary High C. of Scotland, the honorary title of the earls of Errol: formerly an important office similar to that in England; created in 1315 and rendering the holder the nearest Scottish subject to the royal family.— Lord High C. of England, anciently, a hereditary military officer of high rank who had jurisdiction respecting matters cognizable in a court of chivalry. Since 1521, when the office was forfeited, the title has been granted only on occasion.— special c., a person sworn in as a constable on an emergency. — to outrun the c., to run into debt.— con'sta-ble-ry, n. [Rare.] 1. The ward or district of a constable. con'sta-ble-wick†. 2. Constabulary. — con's table-ship, n. The office of a constable.— con'sta-blesst, n. fem.

Mounted Constable of the Pennsylvania State Police.

Con'sta-ble², n. 1. Archibald (²/₂₁1774–⁷/₂₁1827), a Scottish publisher. 2. John (⁶/₁₁1776–³/₂₁1837), an English landscape-painter; reputed father of the French Barbizon school; Salisbury Cathedral.

Con'sta-ble de Bour'bon. See BOURBON, 2.

Con'sta-ble of the Tow'er. 1. [Eng.] An officer, usually a soldier of long and distinguished service, in whom is vested the government of the Tower of London. 2. A novel by W. Harrison Ainsworth.

con-stab'lish, 1 kən-stab'lĭsh; 2 cŏn-stăb'lish, vt. To establish together or in connection with something; as, the constablished laws of the universe. [< CON- + STABLISH.]

con-stab'u-la-ry, n. [-RIES, 1 -rɪz; 2 -rĭs, pl.] The body of constables of a city, town, or government; a military police force; as, the Philippine constabulary, a force of natives under American officers. [< LL. constabularius, < conestabulus; see CONSTABLE.] con-stab'u-la-to-ryt.

Con'stance, 1 kən'stəns; 2 cŏn'stanç, n. 1. A feminine personal name. D. Con-stan'ti-a, 1 kən-stŏn'tsĭ-ə, 2 cŏn-stän'tsĭ-ä; F. Con"stance', 1 kōn"stäns', 2 cōn"stänç'; G. Con-stan'za, 1 kōn-stän'tsə, 2 cōn-stän'tsa; It. Co-stan'za, 1 ko-stän'za, 2 co-stän'zä; Pg. Con-stan'ci-a, 1 kon-stän'sĭ-ə, 2 cōn-stän'çĭ-ä; Sp. Con-stan'za, 1 kon-stän'thə, 2 cōn-stän'thä, Co-sten'za†. 2. Lake of, a lake between N. E. Switzerland and S. Germany; 100 sq. m. 3. Mt., a mountain in Washington; 7,777 ft. high. 4. In Shakespeare's King John, the mother of Prince Arthur. 5. In Knowles's Love Chase, the daughter of Sir William Fondlove, courted and married by Wildrake. 6. See KONSTANZ. [L., constant, firm.]

con'stan-cy, 1 kən'stən-sɪ; 2 cŏn'stan-çy, n. 1. Steadiness or firmness in purpose or action, especially in view of difficulties or impending calamities; calm endurance and determination; faithfulness in service or affection; permanent employment.

> A fellow of plain and uncoined constancy.
> SHAKESPEARE King Henry V. act v, sc. 2.

2. The condition of standing firm; stability; firmness; hence, permanence of state; unalterable continuance; immutability; unchangeableness. 3. Bot. The Siebold's stone-crop. 4†. Certainty; veracity. [< F. constance, < L. constantia, < constan(t-)s; see CONSTANT.] con'stancet. SYN.: see ASSIDUITY; FIDELITY; PERSEVERANCE.

Con'stans, 1 kən'stənz; 2 cŏn'stanç, n. 1. C. I., Flavius Julius (320–350), emperor of the West. 2. C. II., Flavius Heraclius (630–668), emperor of the East.

con'stant, 1 kən'stənt; 2 cŏn'stant, a. 1. Steady in purpose and sentiment; unshaken; persevering; true. 2. Steady in movement; long-continuing or continually recurring; as, constant rain; constant complaints.

> In electrical experiments, those conductors, the charge of which we wish to maintain constant, must be supported by non-conducting materials. J. C. MAXWELL Electricity ch. I, p. 3. [MACM. 1888.]

3. Nat. Hist. Not subject to change, as the distinctive markings on the wings of butterflies. 4. Math. & Physics. Remaining unchanged or invariable; as, a constant force; a constant factor. 5†. Fixed in form; not fluid. 6†. Firm, as in belief or assertion; positive; sure. 7†. Consistent. [F., < L. constan(t-)s, ppr. of consto, stand together, < con- (< cum), together, + sto, stand.] SYN.: see CHANGELESS; CONTINUAL; FREQUENT; PERMANENT; PERPETUAL.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

con'stant¹, n. That which is permanent or invariable. Specif.: (1) Math. A quantity of fixed value in a calculation: often used, as in the differential calculus, to determine a series of changeable values. A constant may be absolute, as one of the cardinal numbers, or arbitrary, where any desired value may be assigned to it. (2) Physics. Any property of a substance, numerically determined, that remains always the same under the same conditions, as the specific gravity, the melting- or freezing-point, or the electrical conductivity.— circular constant, same as PI², 2.— c. of light-equation (Astron.), the number of seconds, which, multiplied by the distance of a body, expressed in astronomical units, gives the corresponding equation of light.— c. of nutation (Astron.), the semiaxis major of the nutational ellipse described in nineteen years by the pole of the earth among the stars. Its value is 9.25".— c. of precession, the average distance of the annual westward movement of the equinox along the ecliptic. Its present value is 50.25".— cyclic c. (Math.), the constant by which a many-valued function changes when it describes a cycle of values.— dielectric c. (Elec.), the number or coefficient expressing the relative dielectric capacity of an insulating medium or substance in terms of the ratio of the capacity of a condenser when its plates are separated by this substance to the capacity of the same condenser when its plates are separated by air.— diffusion c., the numerical coefficient indicating the rate of diffusion of liquids and gases.— dissociation c. (Phys. Chem.), a coefficient from which can be computed the degree of dissociation at varying dilutions of an electrolyte which dissociates into a given number of ions.— electrical c., a coefficient representing some particular electrical property of a substance, as the specific resistance.— gravitation c. (Physics), the force with which two particles, having each a mass of one gram and placed one centimeter apart, would attract each other. It equals 6.6576×10^{-8} dynes. From this constant it is possible to calculate the total mass and density of the earth.— Kerr's c. (Magneto-optics), the coefficient representing the unvarying factor in the equation for the rotation of a ray of polarized light when reflected from the polished face of a magnet-pole. Used in the optical method of determining the strength of a magnetic field.— Kundt's c. (Magneto-optics), the constant factor in the equation expressing the power of thin laminæ of highly magnetic substances, such as iron, nickel, etc., to turn the plane of polarization of transmitted lights.— Newtonian c., same as GRAVITATION-CONSTANT.— precession-c., n. 1. Astron. Any one of the seven numerical quantities used to compute the precession of the equinox. 2. The constant factor in the formula for determining the precessional movement of any gyrating body.— radiation-c., n. The amount of heat, expressed in calories, radiated from a unit surface, in a unit of time, the temperature of the surface being 1°C. above that of the surrounding medium.— spheroidal c. (Astron.), one of the numerical coefficients by means of which the form of the earth is quantitatively expressed.— temperature-c., n. Phenol. The thermal constant.— thermal c. (Phenol.), the total quantity of heat or daylight degrees required by a plant in order to reach a certain phase of germination. This quantity has been variously estimated by different experts on plant-life.— Verdet's c. (Electrostatic Refract.), the constant factor representing the rotation per unit variation of magnetic potential in the formula for the rotation of the plane of polarized light in passing through a layer of a given substance located in a magnetic field in such a way that the light travels in the same direction as the lines of force.

Con'stant², n. 1. A masculine personal name. G. Con'stanz, 1 kŏn'stənts, 2 cŏn'stänts; It. Co-stan'te, 1 kō-stän'tē, 2 cō-stän'tę, Cos-tan'zo†; L. Con'stans, 1 kən'stənz, 2 cŏn'stans; Pg. Con-stan'ci-o, 1 kōn-stän'sĭ-ō, 2 cōn-stän'sē-ō; Sp. Con-stan'ci-o, 1 kōn-stän'thĭ-ō, 2 cōn-stän'thē-ō. 2. J. J. Benjamin, see BENJAMIN-CONSTANT. [L., firm, faithful.]

con'stant-an, 1 kən'stənt-an; 2 cŏn'stant-ăn, n. An alloy of equal parts of nickel and copper: used chiefly in electrical instruments on account of its constant resistance. [< CONSTANT.]

Con"stant' de Re-becque', 1 kōn"stäN' də rə-bek'; 2 cōn"stäN' də re-bĕk', Henri Benjamin, commonly called Benjamin Constant (¹⁰/₂₁1767–¹²/₁₀1830). A French politician and writer; The Spirit of Conquest and Usurpation, etc.

Con'stan-tine, 1 kən'stən-tĭn; 2 cŏn'stan-tĭn, n. 1. A masculine personal name. Dan. G. Con"stan-tin', 1 kŏn'stən-tĭn', 2 cŏn'stän-tĭn'; D. Con'stan-tijn, 1 kōn'stən-tain, 2 cōn'stän-tin; F. Con"stan"tin', 1 kōn'stəN'taN', 2 cōn"stäN'täN'; It. Co"stan-ti'no, 1 kō'stən-tĭ'no, 2 cō'stän-tĭ'no; L. Con"stan-ti'nus, 1 kən'stən-tĭ'nus, 2 cŏn'stan-tĭ'nŭs; Pg. Sp. Con"stan-ti'no, 1 kōn'stən-tĭ'no, 2 cōn"stän-tĭ'no. 2. C. I., Flavius Valerius Aurelius, "the Great" (272–337), first Christian emperor of Rome. 3. C. II., Flavius Claudius (312–340), a Roman emperor, 337–340. 4. Palæologus or Dracoses (1394–1453), last emperor of the East. 5. A department in Algeria; 73,920 sq. m. 6. Its capital, ancient Cirta. 7. A village in St. Joseph county, Mich. 8. (⁶/₁₁1868–³/₁₁1923). King of the Hellenes, ²/₂₁1913–⁵/₂₁1917; expelled; recalled by plebiscite, Dec. 5, 1920; abdicated, Sept. 27, 1922. [L., firm.]

Con"stan-ti'no-grad', 1 kŏn'stən-tĭ'no-grăd'; 2 cŏn'stän-tĭ'no-grăd', n. A town in Poltava government, Ukraine.

Con-stan"ti-no'ple, 1 kən-stan"tĭ-nō'pl; 2 cŏn-stăn"tĭ-nō'pl, n. 1. A vilayet in Turkey, on both sides of Bosporus; 2,702 sq. m. 2. Its capital, and capital of former Ottoman empire, on Bosporus; occupied by British, 1919.

Con-stan"ti-no-pol'i-tan, 1 kən-stan"tĭ-no-pol'ĭ-tən; 2 cŏn-stăn"tĭ-no-pŏl'ĭ-tan. I. a. Pertaining to Constantinople or to its inhabitants. II. n. A native or inhabitant of Constantinople.— Constantinopolitan creed (Eccl.), the Nicene creed of 325 A. D. as modified by the second general council of Constantinople, 381 A. D.

Con-stan"ti-nov', 1 kən-stan'tĭ-nəv'; 2 cŏn-stăn'tĭ-nŏv', n. A town in Volhynia government, Russia. Sta'rot.

Con-stan'tius II., 1 kən-stan'shus; 2 cŏn-stăn'shŭs, Flavius Julius (317–361). A Roman emperor; third son of Constantine the Great.

Con-stan'tius Chlo'rus, Flavius Valerius (250?–306). A Roman emperor; father of Constantine the Great.

con'stat, 1 kən'stat; 2 cŏn'stăt, n. Eng. Law. 1. A certificate of matters of record, issued to persons who have cases before the English Court of Exchequer. 2. An attested copy, under the great seal of England, of the enrolment of letters patent. [L., it appears; pres. ind. act. 3d per. sing. of consto; see CONSTANT.]

con-state', 1 kən-stēt'; 2 cŏn-stăt', vt. To establish; verify. [< F. constater, < L. consto; see CONSTANT.]

con'stel-late, 1 kən'stə-lēt; 2 cŏn'stĕ-lāt (XIII), v. [-LAT'ED; -LAT'ING.] I. t. 1. To group in constellations: often used figuratively. 2. To adorn with constellations; as, the constellated sky. 3. To bring into life under the influence of a constellation or a star.

> We were not constellated under Aquarius, that watery sign, and therefore incapable of Bacchus, cold, washy, bloodless.
> LAMB Last Essays of Elia, Newspapers p. 345. [W. L. & CO.]

con"stel-la'tion, 1 kən'stə-lē'shən; 2 cŏn'stĕ-lā'shon, n. 1. An arbitrary assemblage or group of stars, or the portion of the heavens occupied by such a group. See STAR.

> A great many of these constellations have borne, from ancient times, the names of heroes, animals, or natural or artificial objects, whose forms were supposed to be so depicted on the heavens as to include the principal stars. Now the boundaries of each constellation are so extended as to meet those of the surrounding ones, so that every star in the heavens is in some constellation. The brightest stars in each are named, generally in the order of brightness, by letters of the Greek alphabet; thus, alpha Tauri, or a Tauri, is the most brilliant star of the constellation Taurus. The entire number of constellations now generally recognized is 89. See table opposite, and illus. under STAR.
> The names of the constellations were probably given to them several centuries, perhaps even thousands of years, before the Christian era. NEWCOMB Pop. Astron. pt. I, ch. I, p. 18. [H. 1878.]

2. An assemblage of brilliant things or persons; as, a constellation of wits, virtues, or beauties. 3. Astrol. The aspect or configuration of the planets at the time of one's birth; hence, disposition or character as influenced by one's horoscope. [F., < LL. constellatio(n-), < constellatus, starred, < L. con- (< cum), together, + stella, star.] con"stel-la'cionf.

TABLE OF CONSTELLATIONS.

EXPLANATION.

GROUP I. includes all constellations within 45 degrees of the north pole. GROUP II. includes all constellations within 45 degrees on each side of the equator. GROUP III. includes all constellations within 45 degrees of the south pole. h. = hour or hours. m. = minute or minutes. deg. = degrees.

I had been asked more than once to stand for an Irish constituency, and I had always refused.
MCCARTHY in Contemporary Review Nov., 1891, p. 625.

2. Any body of persons, whose interests are merged or concentered, having a common representative; a clientele; as, an agricultural constituency. 3. [Colloq.] A body of patrons, customers, or subscribers.

con-stit'u-ent, 1 kŏn-stit'yu-ent; 2 cŏn-stit'yų-ĕnt, a. 1. Serving to form or compose as a necessary part; constituting; component; as, chlorin and sodium are the constituent elements of salt. 2. Having the right to take part in the election of a public officer, or to be represented by him; as, the constituent population. [< L. constituo (ppr. constituen(t-)s); see CONSTITUTE.— -ly, adv.— Constituent Assembly, the National Assembly.

con-stit'u-ent, n. 1. One who has the right to vote at an election. 2. One of those who are represented by any one politically or in some business; a client.

I think it a duty in those intrusted with the administration of their affairs to conform themselves to the decided choice of their constituents. JEFFERSON in Randall's Thomas Jefferson vol. ii, ch. 11, p. 427. [D. & r. 1858.]

3. Something that forms a necessary part or element. 4†. One who constitutes or establishes. Syn.: see PART.

con'sti-tute, 1 kŏn'stı-tūt; 2 cŏn'sti-tūt, vt. [-TUT'ED; -TUT'ING.] 1. To form or be the substance of; compose; make up. 2. To impart a given nature or character to; make what it is; make. 3. To establish as by authority; enact; fix; as, this was constituted by law. 4. To depute and give necessary power to; appoint; as, I constitute you my spokesman in this matter. con"sti-tu'tion‡, 1 kŏn'stı-tū'shŏn; 2 cŏn'sti-tū'shon, n. 1. The act of constituting or establishing; as, at the time of the constitution of the courts. 2. Any established system of parts and their relations, determining the character of the whole; the composition or make-up of a thing; as, the constitution of salt.

New-York Tribune Nov. 26, 1891, p. 3, col. 2.

3. The fundamental law of a civil state.

Constitutions may be formulated or not. The chief formal constitution is that of the United States of America, which is the fundamental organic law by which the national union of the States was formed, and under which the government is administered. It was framed and adopted by a convention called for that purpose (Sept. 17, 1787), ratified by each State separately, and went into operation March 4, 1789. It can be amended only in the manner provided by itself. Amendments I. to X. were added Nov. 20, 1789–Dec. 15, 1791; Amendment XI., Jan. 8, 1798; Amendment XII., Sept. 25, 1804; Amendment XIII., Dec. 18, 1865; Amendment XIV., July 28, 1868; Amendment XV., March 30, 1870; Amendment XVI., Feb. 25, 1913; Amendment XVII., May 30, 1913. Amendment XVIII., January 16, 1920; Amendment XIX., Aug. 26, 1920. Amendments proposed by Congress must be ratified by two-thirds of the States, acting through their legislatures. This kind of constitution is frequently known as a rigid constitution. The British constitution is the whole body of public law, written and unwritten, which has grown up during the ages, consisting of immemorial customs, settled precedents, judicial decisions, and parliamentary enactments, and is known as an unwritten or customary constitution.

The Constitution of 1789 . . . after all deductions, . . . ranks above every other written constitution for the intrinsic excellence of its scheme, its adaptation to the circumstances of the people, the simplicity, brevity, and precision of its language.
BRYCE Am. Commonwealth vol. i, p. 25. [MACM. 1888.]

4. Any established law or custom.

It was an ancient constitution through all Arabia, to hold four months of the year sacred, in which all war was to cease.
PRIDEAUX Mahomet p. 57. [BA. 1808.]

5. The organic law of any organized body or association of persons; as, the constitution of the American Bible Society. 6. Civ. Law. An imperial ordinance or rescript originating in the sole will of the emperor; as, the constitutions of Justinian. [F., < L. constitutio(n-), < constitutus; see CONSTITUTE.] con"sti-tu'tion†.

Syn.: see CHARACTER.

— arterial constitution, the florid appearance in which the blood is rich in red blood-globules and fibrin.— Constitutions of Clarendon (Eng. Hist.), a scheme of administrative reform drawn up in 1164, clearly defining the respective jurisdictions of the civil and ecclesiastical courts. Other provisions were: no bishop to leave the country and no ecclesiastical appeals to be taken to Rome without the king's consent; a dispute between a layman and a cleric to be settled by twelve laymen and a judge; refusal to appear before an ecclesiastical court not to entail excommunication; all suits for debt to be tried in civil courts.— fundamental constitutions (Amer. Hist.), a plan for governing the colony of Carolina, drawn up in 1663, probably by Shaftesbury, and embracing a judicial system and a legislature so arranged as to dissolve upon nonagreement into four chambers, together with an elaborate system of feudal tenure: practically inoperative. The plan was dropped in 1693.— Irish Constitution of 1782 (Irish Hist.), the constitution adopted under Grattan's Parliament, giving effect to resolutions adopted at Dungannon in 1781, declaring the right of Ireland to recognition as a separate nation under the British crown; of the country, to free trade; of the judiciary, to absolute independence; for the repeal of the penal laws against the Roman Catholics, and of the limitation of the Mutiny Act to a single session.— provincial constitutions [Eng.], decrees issued from time to time by provincial synods under successive archbishops of Canterbury.

Con"sti-tu'tion‡, n. U. S. Hist. An American frigate of 44 guns, launched Sept. 20, 1797, which became renowned in the suppression of Barbary pirates and for her many victories in the War of 1812, and was the subject of O. W. Holmes's poem Old Ironsides, under the influence of which she has been retained in the navy and is now at the Boston Navy Yard. She captured the British frigate "Guerrière" off Cape Race, Aug. 19, 1812, in an action which lasted 30 minutes.

con"sti-tu'tion-al, 1 kŏn'stı-tiū'shŏn-ăl; 2 cŏn'sti-tū'shon-al, a. 1. Belonging to, inherent in, or due to the constitution or composition of a person or thing; as, constitutional weakness. 2. Consistent with, required by, or included in the constitution of a state; lawful; as, a constitutional provision; a constitutional amendment. 3. Existing or exerting power under the provisions of a constitution or recognized fundamental law; as, a constitutional government. 4. [Colloq.] For the benefit of one's constitution. 5. Upholding; loyal to the constitution. [< L. constitutio(n-); see CONSTITUTION.] con"sti-tu'tion-a-ry†. Syn.: see RADICAL.— Constitutional Church (Fr. Hist.), the church established July 12, 1790, by the Constituent Assembly, which provided for the election of bishops by the clergy without applying to Rome, and constituted all the clerics civil functionaries with an annual stipend: abolished by a concordat in 1801 which continued until the Separation Law of Dec., 1905, established the Associations Cultuelles.— c. clergy, those who accepted the civil constitution of the church so established.— C. Democrat, C. Democratic Party (Rus. Polit.). See under DEMOCRAT.— c. law, see LAW.— C. Union party (U. S. Pol. Hist.), a party in the campaign of 1860, with a compromise platform. See under UNION.— c. units (Biol.), the vehicles of specific characters, ancestral and parental traits, and the individual peculiarities of the organism itself: as postulated by Spencer, intermediate between biological unit or cell and the chemical molecule.

con"sti-tu'tion-al, n. [Colloq.] A walk or exercise taken for the good of one's constitution or health.

Even my constitutionals in the chilly halls possessed a certain charm, for the house was never still.
LOUISA M. ALCOTT Hospital Sketches p. 44. [R. BROS. 1890.]

— con"sti-tu'tion-al-ize, vt. To take a constitutional.— con"sti-tu'tion-al-i-za'tion, n.

con"sti-tu'tion-al-ism, 1 kŏn'stı-tiū'shŏn-ăl-izm; 2 cŏn'sti-tū'shon-al-iṣm, n. 1. The theory or principle of constitutional government. 2. Adherence to that theory.

Constitutionalism, at once quelling Sanseulottic riot at Vincennes and Royalist treachery in the Tuileries, is great, this day, and prevails. CARLYLE French Rev. vol. ii, p. 114. [S. & W. 1871.]

con"sti-tu'tion-al-ist, 1 kŏn'stı-tiū'shŏn-ăl-ist; 2 cŏn'sti-tū'shon-al-ist, n. 1. One who adheres to the constitution of the country. 2. One who advocates constitutionalism in opposition to absolutism, etc. Specifically: (1) In France, an advocate of the Constitution of 1791. (2) [C-] In Pennsylvania, (a) formerly, one who would retain the State Constitution of 1776, and (b) one who opposed the "Conventionalists" in 1804. con"sti-tu'tion-ist‡.

con"sti-tu'tion-al'i-ty, 1 kŏn'stı-tiū'shŏn-ăl'i-tı; 2 cŏn'sti-tū'shon-ăl'i-ty, n. The state of being in accordance with the Constitution, as of the United States or of a State.

con"sti-tu'tion-al-ly, 1 kŏn'stı-tiū'shŏn-ăl-ı; 2 cŏn'sti-tū'shon-al-y, adv. 1. In accordance with or in relation to the physical constitution; naturally. 2. In accordance with the constitution of the country.

con'sti-tu"tive‡, } 1. Helping to form or compose; forming; hence, essential; as, a constitutive enactment; a constitutive element. 2. Having power to enact, institute, or establish; instituting.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

con'sti-tu"tiv(e)‡, n. A quality or constituent part of anything; an element of a constitution.

con'sti-tu'tor, 1 kŏn'stı-tiū'tər or -ter; 2 cŏn'sti-tū'tor, n. 1. One who or that which constitutes. 2. Law. One who promises to pay the debt of another.

constr., abbr. Construction; construed.

con-strain', 1 kŏn-strēn'; 2 cŏn-strān', v. I. t. 1. To compel to action or to inaction, by either physical or moral means; urge; oblige; as, hunger constrained him to eat. 2. To confine or compress forcibly or unnaturally; as, the dress constrains her waist; a constrained position or voice. 3. Mech. To subject to constraint. See CONSTRAINT. 4†. To violate; force. II. i. To compel; urge; oblige. [< OF. constraindre, < L. constringo; see CONSTRICT.] con-streyn'†. Syn.: see COMPEL; MAKE.— con-strain'a-bl(e)‖, a.— con-strain'er, n.— con-strain'ing-ly, adv.— con-strain-ment, n.

con-strain'd, } 1 kŏn-strēnd'; 2 cŏn-strānd', pa. 1.
con-strain'd's, } Subjected to compulsion, or resulting from compulsion. 2. Unnaturally repressed; marked by constraint. 3. Confined and compressed.— con-strain'ed-ly, adv.— con-strain'ed-ness, n.

con-straint', 1 kŏn-strēnt'; 2 cŏn-strānt', n. 1. The operation of power, physical or moral, compelling or preventing action; coercion to or from. 2. The result of constraining; the state of being constrained. 3. Unnaturalness in manner resulting from distrust or diffidence, or from an attempt to repress one's feelings. 4. Mech. Anything that prevents a particle or body from moving except in some particular manner; the state of being thus hampered. Constraint is measured, in the case of a particle, by its mass multiplied by the square of that velocity which would produce the actual velocity if compounded with the velocity the particle would have if free. [< OF. constrainte, orig. f. pp. of constraindre; see CONSTRAIN.] con-streint'†. Syn.: see RESERVE.

con-strict', 1 kŏn-strikt'; 2 cŏn-strict', vt. To compress or draw together at some point by external or internal force; cause to shrink in places; contract transversely; bind; cramp: generally the result of some physical growth; as, a cell or pod constricted into an hour-glass shape.

Large climbing plants . . . often do constrict the trees by which they rise, and, killing them, stand erect themselves.
LIVINGSTONE South Africa ch. 16, p. 164. [L. W. B.]

[< L. constrictus, pp. of constringo, < con- (< cum), together, + stringo, draw tight.] — con-strict'ed, pa. Contracted at a particular point or points. con-strict'‡.— con-stric'tiv(e)‡, a. Tending to constrict.

con-stric'tion, 1 kŏn-strik'shŏn; 2 cŏn-strić'shon, n. 1. The act of constricting; local or transverse contraction. 2. The state of being constricted; a constricted part.

con-stric'tor, 1 kŏn-strik'tər or -ter; 2 cŏn-strić'tor, n. 1. That which compresses as by a band. 2. A serpent that encircles and crushes its prey, as a boa or python. See illus. under ABOMA. 3. Anat. A muscle that constricts an organ or opening; as, constrictors of the pharynx, thin flat muscles which control its dilatation and contraction; a sphincter.

con-stringe', 1 kŏn-strinj': 2 cŏn-strinġ', vt. [CONSTRINGED'; CON-STRING'ING.] To cause contraction in. [< L. constringo; see CONSTRICT.]

con-stru'a-bl(e)‖, 1 kŏn-strū'ə-bl; 2 cŏn-struˀa-bl, a. Capable of being construed.— con-struˀa-bil'i-ty, n.

con-struct', 1 kŏn-strukt'; 2 cŏn-strŭct', vt. 1. To adjust and join the materials or parts of so as to form a permanent whole; build; as, to construct a ship. 2. To form mentally by putting ideas together; fabricate; fashion; devise; as, to construct a theory. 3. Math. To exhibit (an algebraic value) geometrically. 4†. To construe, as a sentence. [< L. constructus, pp. of construo, < con- (< cum), together, + struo, pile up.]

con'struct, 1 kŏn'strukt; 2 cŏn'strŭct, a. Relating to or expressing construction.— construct state, in Hebrew grammar, same as ANNEXION.

con'struct, n. 1. Any constructed object; specif. (Psychol.), any form of mental representation regarded as a result of external stimulation. 2. Gram. A phrasal group of words used in regular grammatical construction.

The distinction between compounds and constructs is a delicate one, so much so that two persons of like birth and education may be found to differ upon it.
EARLE Philol. Eng. Tongue p. 573. [CL. P. 1873.]

3. Math. A surface or outline.

con-struc'tion, 1 kŏn-struk'shŏn; 2 cŏn-strŭc'shon, n. 1. The act of constructing; also, that which is constructed; a structure; as, its construction took a long time; those old cromlech constructions. 2. The peculiarities, collectively, in which one structure may differ from another; style of building or composing; as, a building of steel or iron construction.

Steel- or iron-construction. The process of building bridges, cars, ships, houses, and towers with the aid of a skeleton framework of beams, plates, and columns of prepared steel or iron, has been brought to great perfection within recent years. The first cast-iron bridge was built in 1779 at Colebrookedale, England; improved methods of steel-manufacture have led to a more widespread use of steel for building purposes. The steel used for these structural purposes is chiefly in the form of plates or shapes, the more important being the I bar, the angle, the channel and the Z bar; joining is done by rivets and screws, and as a rule the construction is webbed or cellular. The demand for fire-proof construction brought about the use of steel framework for flooring, and in time steel columns were introduced to carry the floor-loads and walls; hence, owing to the tensile strength of steel, arose the possibility of the very tall buildings known as 'skyscrapers,' where each tier consists of a rectangular group of steel-beam flooring and wall-columns braced against wind-pressure. See SKELETON BUILDING CONSTRUCTION. In structural steel this tensile strength varies from 52,000 to 70,000 pounds to the square inch, but in building work not more than 20,000 pounds to the square inch is calculated on. Steel enters into every field of construction, as caissons, sheet-piling, mine-strutting, etc., and but for the corrosive action of the elements such constructions would be imperishable.

3. The act of construing, or the interpretation thereby arrived at; as, the construction put upon his behavior.

DRUMMOND Greatest Thing ch. 3, p. 37. [J. P. 1890.]

4. Law. The interpretation of an instrument or statute so as to ascertain its true meaning and legal effect. 5. Gram. (1) The putting together of words so as to form sentences, or the arrangement and union of words so produced; syntactical arrangement.

We find in every page words used in wrong senses, and constructions which violate the plainest rules of grammar. We have the low vulgarism of 'mutual friend' for 'common friend.'
MACAULAY Boswell's Johnson p. 139. [P. S. & CO. 1854.]

(2) The determination of the syntactical relations (of a word or sentence).

Errors in grammatical construction (embracing connection and arrangement) are solecisms. A solecism may be: (1) A violation of grammatical concord; as, "Whom (properly who) do they suppose will be appointed?" "Each of the four living writers had their (properly his) writings recited." (2) A violation of grammatical arrangement; as, "A good man not only deserves the respect but the love of his fellow beings" (rather, "A good man deserves not only the respect of his fellow beings, but also their love"). "He could see that the room had been swept with half an eye." (3) A violation of grammatical propriety; as, "This is a very different case than (should be from) that"; "Vices in communtiy" (properly in the community); "The governor was attended with (correctly by) his staff"; "She wrote better than any (properly any other) pupil in her class." In the following statement the error is double: "This paper has the ablest staff of any of its contemporaries." Not only do we have ablest of any, but "this paper" is included among its own contemporaries; the statement should have been "an abler staff than," etc. (4) A violation of grammatical precision; as, "The rich and the poor (not the rich and poor) are alike mortal"; "He treated his benefactors with supreme (not the most supreme) contempt"; "Had he have laid low (correctly had he lain low) he would not have been wounded"; "When he was (properly had) retired to his tent, they sat silent a long time." For errors of rhetorical construction, see RHETORICAL.

6. Psychol. The power of forming new combinations or systems of knowledge or thought out of elements already in the mind; mental constructiveness: also, the exercise and the products of this power. See phrases below. See CONSTRUCTIVE FACULTY.

The Abstractions, Inductions, Deductions, and Experimental processes of science . . . afford likewise examples of Construction.
BAIN Senses and Intellect bk. ii, p. 591. [A. 1879.]

7. Math. The preparation with instruments of a geometric design embodying certain fixed conditions and relations; also, the design so made. [F. < L. constructio(n-), < constructus; see CONSTRUCT.]

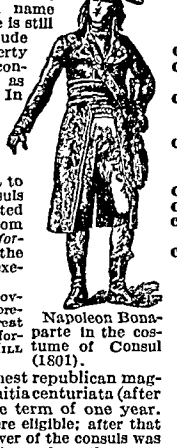
con'sul, 1 kon'sul; 2 cŏn'sŭl, vt. Com. To submit, as an invoice, for consular inspection and stamp of approval.

con'sul, n. 1. An officer appointed to reside in a foreign port or city, chiefly as the representative of his country's commercial interests. The consul is the prototype of the ancient Greek prozenus, by which name the consular representative of Greece is still known. The duties of a consul include the protection of the person and property of his fellow countrymen within his consular jurisdiction, as well as acting as their legal adviser, if so required. In some Oriental and African countries the consul is also invested, in both civil and criminal cases, with judicial powers which are exercised jointly with representatives either of his own country or of that to which he is accredited. The consuls of both Great Britain and the United States, as a rule, are prohibited from engaging in any business. Before a foreign consul can take up office in the United States he must receive his exequatur from the President.



Napoleon Bonaparte in the costume of Consul (1801).

For more than a hundred years the Government of the United States failed to appreciate fully the Consul as a factor in the great work of protecting and enlarging the foreign commerce of the country. C. S. HILL in Proc. A. A. A. S. vol. xxxiv, p. 511.

2. Rom. Hist. One of the two highest republican magistrates at Rome, elected by the comitia centuriata (after the expulsion of the kings) for the term of one year.

Until 366 B. C. patricians only were eligible; after that plebeians also were elected. The power of the consuls was for many years nearly that of the kings whom they supplanted; but under the empire it faded to a mere presidency of the senate, of public games, etc., and it died out in the 6th century A. D. The year was often indicated by naming the consuls (abbreviated coss.) of that year; but the consular year usually coincided only partly with the calendar year. 3. The chief magistrate of a medieval city with municipal government, having varying functions. 4. F. Hist. The title given to Napoleon Bonaparte, Cambacérès, and Lebrun from December, 1799, to May, 1804, as supreme magistrates of the French republic, Bonaparte being known as the First Consul; the others, the Second and Third respectively. Lebrun and Cambacérès had consultative voices only. The First Consul became emperor in 1804. 5. The representative of a cyclists' touring club in a certain locality. 6†. A counselor. [L., < consulo, consider.]—con'sul-gen'er-al, n. [CONSULS-GENERAL, pl.] A consul having supervision of the other consulates in the country of his residence.—con'sul-aget, n. A consulate.—con'sul-ship, n. The office or term of office of either a Roman or a modern consul; a consulate.

Elec.* A block of metal forming a part of an electric circuit and adapted to aid in breaking the circuit. — c.-break"er, n. Elec. An instrument for interrupting or breaking an electric circuit by separating two metals through which the current passes. — c.-irritation, n. The irritating effect upon plant cells of the contact of certain fungi or insects, often resulting in excessive and abnormal growth. Compare IRRITATION, 2. — c.-level, n. A delicately adjusted spirit-level, pivoted transversely: used for determining slight variations of length. — c.-maker, n. Elec. A device for providing electric contact; or for making and breaking such contact at will. — c.-mass, n. Chem. The live mass containing the agent setting up catalytic action in a contact process. — c.-metamorphism, n. See METAMORPHISM. — c.-mineral, n. A mineral produced by contact-metamorphism. — c.-paper, n. Photog. A sensitized paper used in contact-printing. — c. phenomena (Geol.), the physical and chemical effects produced along or near the contact of a mass of igneous rock, during and as a result of its eruption, solidification, and cooling. — c.-pin, n. Elec. A metallic pin used to establish contact for the conduction of current between the parts of an electrical machine. — c. process, any of several methods of utilizing contact action, as in chemistry and physics. — c.-ring, n. Elec. A metal ring connected with a motor or dynamo which conveys current to a conductor sliding upon it. — c. series (Elec.), a series of metals each of which would be positively electrified by contact with the one following, as zinc, lead, tin, copper, platinum, carbon. See ELECTROMOTIVE SERIES. — c. substance (Phys. Chem.), one of certain substances possessing the property of facilitating and accelerating a contact reaction. — electric c., the connection of a circuit with a conducting body, or the completion of a circuit by a conducting body. The current from a dynamo may produce death in either way; the physical effect of a contact is increased if it be rendered intermittent. — external c. (Astron.), the position of a planet or the moon and the sun in which their disks touch but do not overlap. — internal c. (Astron.), the position of a planet or the moon and the sun in which the disk of the sun completely encloses that of the planet. — sliding c. (auto.), the contact between flat surfaces moved against each other: distinguished from rolling contact, in which one surface rotates against the other. — wipe c. 1. Contact occurring only at intervals between parts of machinery. 2. Elec. A contact formed between two moving conductors, or between one moving and one stationary conductor. — con-tac'tion†, n. The act of touching. — con-tac'tu-al, a. Connected with or implying contact. — -ly, adv.

Contact.
1. Contact of line and curve.
2. Contact of two circles.
aa, points of contact.

con'tac-tor, 1 kon'tak-tor or -ter; 2 cŏn'tăc-tor, n. Elec. An electromagnetic or electropneumatic contact device employed in certain forms of motor-car control.

con-ta'gi-o-, 1 kon-tē'ji-o-; 2 cŏn-tā'ġi-o-. Derived from Latin contagium, contagion (see CONTAGIUM): a combining form in medical terms.

con-ta'gion, 1 kon-tē'jon; 2 cŏn-tā'ġon, n. 1. Med. The communication of disease from person to person by contact, direct or indirect. Compare INFECTION. 2. The communication of manners, states of feeling, or modes of view from one to another, among persons closely associated. 3. The medium of transmission of disease; contagium. 4. The power or tendency to be transmitted.

All great actors, when they have succeeded perfectly in their art, have been themselves infected by the passion, the contagion of which they wished to communicate to others.
MATHEWS Oratory and Orators ch. 4, p. 113. [s. c. g. 1879.]

Syn.: infection. Infection is frequently confused with contagion, even by medical men. The best usage now limits contagion to diseases that are transmitted by contact with the diseased person, either directly by touch or indirectly by use of the same articles, by breath, effluvia, etc. Infection is applied to any disease transmissible by germs whether such transmission is effected by contact, by the agency of insects or other creatures, or by diffusion by air, water, or fluids.

The word contagion is correctly applied only to particular diseases; the word infection is all-embracing, and may be applied to every disease that is transmittable by germs. A term now gaining ground in medical practise is transmissible, which is used to embrace diseases that are contagious and infectious.

— psychical contagion, the spreading of a nervous disease, as chorea, through suggestion and imitation. — con-ta'gioned, pa. Affected by contagion. — con-ta'gion-ist, n. One who maintains the theory that certain diseases are contagious.

con-tex'tivs, } weaves or entwines together; as, a contextive system or method.

con-tex'ture, 1 kon-teks'chur or -tiur; 2 cŏn-tĕks'chur or -tūr, vt. [Rare.] To effect by contexture; interlace; weave.

con-tex'ture, n. 1. Anything made of interwoven materials. 2. The style or manner of interweaving; disposition and arrangement of the constituent materials; constitution or composition of a thing.

SWIFT Works, Tale of a Tub p. 72. [W. P. N. 1871.]

3. Scots Law. The right to material woven into one's fabric. See CONSTRUCTURE. 4†. Context. [< L. contextus, pp. of contexo; see CONTEXT, n.]— con-tex'tur-al, a. Pertaining to contexture.

contg., abbr. Containing.

Con"ti', 1 kŏn"tē'; 2 cŏn"tī', Prince de (1/32 1664–2/21 1709), François Louis de Bourbon, a French general elected king of Poland, but deposed by Augustus of Saxony.

con"tig-na'tion†, n. 1. A uniting together. 2. A framework.

con"ti-gu'i-ty, 1 kon"tı-giū'ı-tı; 2 cŏn"tı-gū'ı-ty, n. 1. The relation of being contiguous or in actual contact; immediate connection; hence, nearness; proximity.

The contiguity of the two boats was such as to excite serious alarm. M. S. CUMMINS Lamplighter p. 405. [H. M. & CO. 1888.]

2. Uninterrupted connection, as in time or space; continuity. 3. Physiol. Psychol. The adjacency or immediate relation of two impressions. See LAW OF CONTIGUITY (below). [< LL. contiguita(t-)s, < L. contiguus; see CONTIGUOUS.]— law of contiguity (Psychol.), the principle of association by which anything present in the mind tends to recall what was originally most closely connected with it in space or time. See LAWS OF ASSOCIATION, under ASSOCIATION.

con-tig'u-ous, 1 kon-tig'yu-us; 2 cŏn-tĭg'yu-ŭs, a. Touching or joining at the edge or boundary; close together; adjacent; adjoining: followed by to. [< L. contiguus, < contingo; see CONTACT.] con-tig'u-ate†; con-tigue't, a. Syn.: see ADJACENT.— Prep.: to.— con-tig'u-ous-ly, adv.— con-tig'u-ous-ness, n.

Con'tin, 1 kon'tın; 2 cŏn'tĭn, n. A village in Ross and Cromarty, Scotland.

con'ti-nence, }1 kon'tı-nens, -nen-sı; 2 cŏn'tı-nĕnç, con'ti-nen-cy, } -nĕn-çy, n. 1. Self-restraint with respect to desires, appetites, and passions; especially, self-restraint with respect to the sexual passion, either in celibacy or in marriage.

The very sensual tone of Greek life rendered the modern notion of prolonged continence wholly alien to their thoughts.
LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. ii, p. 26. [A. 1886.]

2. Capacity for containing; content. 3†. Continuity. [< F. continence, < L. contenentia, < contene(t-)s; see CONTINENT, a.] con'ty-nent†. Syn.: see ABSTINENCE.

con'ti-nent, 1 kon'tı-nent; 2 cŏn'tı-nĕnt, a. 1. Self-restrained; moderate, especially with respect to the sexual passion; abstinent; chaste. 2. [Archaic.] Containing: with of.

Each of these affluents having lost its individual name and existence in that [river] which at last . . . represents and is continent of them all. TRENCH Words p. 151. [W. J. W. 1861.]

con'ti-nent, n. 1. One of the great bodies of land on the globe; typically, a basin elevated above the surface of the sea enclosed between lofty mountain ranges, and jutting like a wedge into the water hemisphere.

The land of the globe is sometimes divided into two continents, the eastern and the western; sometimes into four, Africa, Asia, and Europe being separately enumerated; more commonly into five, Australia being reckoned as one; still oftener into six, North and South America being counted separately; and, since 1909, the land about the south pole as another — the Antarctic, Austral, or seventh continent.

2. [C-] In a restricted sense, Europe, as distinguished from the British Islands; as, a tour on the Continent. 3. Eccl. See ENCRATITE. 4†. Land generally, as distinguished from water. 5†. That which contains. 6†. That which is contained. [< LL. continen(t-)s, < L. continen(t-)s, continuous; see CONTINENT, a.]— dark continent, Africa.— island c., an island so large as to merit, or nearly merit, the designation of a continent, as Australia.

con"ti-nen'tal, 1 kon"tı-nen'tal; 2 cŏn"tı-nĕn'tal, a. 1. Pertaining to or characteristic of a continent; as, a continental climate.

He was . . . Continental in all his ideas and fancies, and could not condescend to be an islander.
WINTHROP Edwin Brothertoft p. 23. [T. & F. 1862.]

2. [C-] In English literature, pertaining to or characteristic of the continent of Europe; as, the Continental press. 3. [C-] Pertaining to the United States during the period of the Revolutionary war. 4. Of continental breadth or proportions; huge; as, a continental glacier.

— Continental Congress, see CONGRESS.— c. divide, the watershed ridge of a continent: specif., the divide in the Rocky Mountain region, between the streams flowing to the Atlantic ocean, and those flowing to the Pacific or into the interior basins.— C. money, paper money issued by the Continental Congress from time to time until it reached the amount of $200,000,000. The paper was so thick that the British called it the "pasteboard money of the rebels." It rapidly depreciated in value, and reached nil at the close of 1779.— c. plateau (Phys. Geog.), a continent extended to the brink of its continental shelf.— C. pronunciation, a pronunciation of Latin and Greek in which the vowels are given the sounds they have in most languages of continental Europe.— c. shelf (Phys. Geog.), the irregular submarine margin of a continent, marking its real limits, and succeeded by a steep declivity (= the c. slope) into the ocean basin.— C. system, a system of commercial blockade organized in 1806 against England by Napoleon I., by which he sought to deprive her of all trade with the Continent.— con"ti-nen'tal-ism, n. Any manner, mode of expression, belief, idea, action, etc., peculiar to or characteristic of the European continent.— con"ti-nen'tal-ly, adv.

Con"ti-nen'tal, n. 1. In English literature, a native or resident of the continent of Europe. 2. U. S. Hist. (1) A soldier of the regular forces under the control of Congress in the Revolution. Con"ti-nen'tal-ler†. (2) [Slang.] A note of Continental money; as, not worth a Continental. 3. [c-] An inhabitant of a continent.

con"ti-nen'tal-ist, 1 kon"tı-nen'tal-ist; 2 cŏn"tı-nĕn'tal-ist, n. 1. An inhabitant of a continent; a continental. 2. [C-] U. S. Hist. One who advocated a compact union of the States at the close of the Revolution.

con"ti-nen-tal'i-ty, 1 kon"tı-nen-tal'ı-tı; 2 cŏn"tı-nĕn-tăl'ı-ty, n. 1. The state or quality of being continental. 2. Meteor. The aggregate of the qualities possessed by a continental climate (see CLIMATE). Specif., the character of a climate as compared with one that is typically continental. It is measured by the annual range of temperature, after eliminating the effect of latitude, according to a method devised by W. Zenker.

con"ti-nen'tal-ize, 1 kon"tı-nen'tal-aiz; 2 cŏn"tı-nĕn'tal-ız, v. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] I. t. To impart continental character or characteristics to; make continental. II. i. To travel through the continent of Europe.

con-tin'gen-cy, 1 kon-tin'jen-sı; 2 cŏn-tĭn'ĝĕn-çy, n. [-CIES, 1 -siz; 2 -çiz, pl.] 1. Possibility of happening.

The foolish and the ignorant are led astray by the idea of contingency. FROUDE Short Studies, Spinoza p. 313. [S. 1872.]

2. A contingent event; casualty; happening. 3. Biom. A method of statistical study of biological data which can not be expressed numerically. 4†. Contact; touch. [< LL. contingentia, < L. contingen(t-)s; see CONTINGENT.] con-tin'gence†. Syn.: see ACCIDENT; CASE; EVENT; HAZARD.

con-tin'gent, 1 kon-tin'jent; 2 cŏn-tĭn'ĝĕnt, a. 1. Liable to occur, but not determinable by any known rule or law; resulting from an agency or agencies the operation of which is uncertain; not predictable; fortuitous.

All salaries are reckoned on contingent, as well as on actual services. EMERSON Cond. of Life, Wealth p. 88. [H. M. & CO. 1888.]

2. Logic. Not necessarily, yet possibly or probably, consequent; possible; probable; as, a contingent conclusion. 3. Metaph. Existing or possible to exist and neither necessary nor impossible, as the beings and events of human history; not ontologically necessary; merely historical. 4. Law. Dependent upon an uncertain future event; as, a contingent liability. [< L. contingen(t-)s, ppr. of contingo; see CONTACT.] Syn.: see INCIDENTAL.— contingent remainder (Law), a remainder limited so as to depend on a condition that may not happen or be performed until after the determination of the particular estate on which the remainder is limited.— c. use (Law), a use to be granted in case future uncertain conditions shall obtain, as in a conveyance of land.— con-tin'gent-ly, adv. By contingency; accidentally.— con-tin'gent-ness, n. The state of being contingent, fortuitous, or conditional.

con-tin'u-a, 1 kon-tin'yu-ə; 2 cŏn-tĭn'yu-a, n. Plural of CONTINUUM.

con-tin'u-al, 1 kon-tin'yu-əl; 2 cŏn-tĭn'yu-al, a. 1. Renewed in regular succession; often repeated; very frequent; as, continual interruptions: continual rains.

But, in truth, their life thus far has been a continual prayer.
HAWTHORNE Mosses, New Adam and Eve p. 285. [H. M. & CO.]

2. Kept up or going on without break or interruption; proceeding without rest or stay; unintermitting; continuous: used thus generally with intentional exaggeration; as, continual study. [< F. continuel, < L. continuus; see CONTINUOUS.] Syn.: ceaseless, constant, continuous, incessant, invariable, perpetual, regular, unbroken, unceasing, uninterrupted, unvarying. Continuous describes that which is absolutely without pause or break; continual, that which often intermits, but as regularly begins again. A continuous beach is exposed to the continual beating of the waves. In like manner, the incessant discharge of firearms makes the ceaseless roar of battle. Constant is sometimes used in the sense of continual; but its chief uses are mental and moral. See CHANGELESS; PERPETUAL.— con-tin'u-al-ly, adv. 1. Very often; habitually. 2. Continuously.— con-tin'u-al-ness, n. The quality of being continual.— con-tin"u-al'i-ty†.

con-tin'u-ance, 1 kon-tin'yu-ans; 2 cŏn-tĭn'yu-anç, n. 1. The state of continuing, holding on, lasting, persisting, remaining, or abiding; duration; permanence; constancy.

A great many men cannot conceive of a personal continuance after the bodily functions are exhausted.
J. WEISS Immortal Life p. 4. [L. B. & CO. 1881.]

2. Uninterrupted succession; prolongation; perpetuation; survival; as, the continuance of a race or dynasty. 3. Succession of time. 4. Law. The postponement of proceedings in a cause from one day or term to another; the entry made for that purpose on the record. 5†. Ductility; a holding together. [OF., < L. continuan(t-)s, ppr. of continuo; see CONTINUE.] con-tĭn'u-an-cy†; con-tĭn'u-aunce†.

con-tĭn'u-ant, 1 kŏn-tĭn'yu-ənt; 2 cŏn-tĭn'yu-ant, a. Continuing; prolonged.

con-tĭn'u-ant, n. 1. Phonol. A letter whose sound may be prolonged. 2. Math. A determinant all of whose constituents are zero except those in its principal diagonal and the two diagonals that border it, each number in one of these latter being 1.

con-tĭn'u-ate†, rt. 1. To join closely together. 2. To make continuous.— con-tĭn'u-at"ing, pa.

con-tĭn'u-ate, 1 kŏn-tĭn'yu-ēt; 2 cŏn-tĭn'yu-āt, a. 1. Closely joined or put together. 2. Unbroken; uninterrupted. [< L. continuatus: see CONTINUATION.] — con-tĭn'u-ate-ly, adv.— con-tĭn'u-ate-ness, n.

con-tĭn"u-a'tion, 1 kŏn-tĭn'yu-ē'shŏn; 2 cŏn-tĭn"yu-ā'shon, n. 1. The act of continuing, or that which is added by continuing. Specif.: (1) Extension in space; as, the continuation of the line ab from b to c; to build a continuation of a railroad. (2) Extension in time; as, continuation in office. (3) Extension in development or course; prolongation; as, the continuation of a history.

Eternal life in heaven is plainly but a continuation and development of eternal life on earth.
A. W. THOROLD Presence of Christ ch. 6, p. 232. [BAN. & S.]

2. Math. In fluxions, integration by parts. 3. Contango. 4. pl. [Slang.] Trousers. [< L. continuatio(n-), < continuatus, pp. of continuo; see CONTINUE.]

con-tĭn'u-a-tive, } 1 kŏn-tĭn'yu-ē-tĭv; 2 cŏn-tĭn'yu-ā-con-tĭn'u-a-tĭvˢ, ʃ tĭv, a. Noting or causing continuance or duration.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

con-tĭn'u-a-tive, n. 1. That which causes continuation. 2. Gram. A simple and unemphatic connective. 3. Philol. A word or particle implying continuance, as the verb to dwell.

con-tĭn'u-a"tor, 1 kŏn-tĭn'yu-ē"tər or -tor; 2 cŏn-tĭn'yu-ā"tor, n. One who or that which continues, as a succession or a work.

Heine is noteworthy, because he is the most important German successor and continuator of Goethe in Goethe's most important line of activity. MATTHEW ARNOLD Essays in Criticism, Heine p. 142. [MACM. 1877.]

con-tĭn'ue, 1 kŏn-tĭn'yu; 2 cŏn-tĭn'yu, v. [-UED; -U-ING.] I. t. 1. To extend, prolong, produce; add to. (1) In space, to prolong the course of; as, to continue a line of road. (2) In time, to prolong the duration of; extend the term of; as, to continue work. (3) In development or execution, to keep up; carry forward; persevere in; as, to continue a policy or a story. (4) In law, to postpone (judicial proceedings); grant a continuance of. 2†. To connect; unite. 3†. To keep alive, II. i. 1. To be durable or permanent; last; endure; as, a continuing city. 2. To remain or abide in the same place, state, or condition; as, to continue at college.

MILTON P. L. bk. ii, l. 314.

3. To keep on; persist in an action or operation; as, he continued in the same strain. [< F. continuer, < L. continuo, < continuus; see CONTINUOUS.] con-tyn'ue†. SYN.: see ABIDE; LIVE; PERSEVERE; PERSIST.— con-tĭn'u-a-bl(eᴾ, a.— con-tĭn'u-ing-ly, adv.

con-tĭn'ued, 1 kŏn-tĭn'yud; 2 cŏn-tĭn'yud, pa. 1. Extended in space or time; uninterrupted; carried on further; or after, or without interruption. 2. Continual. — continued bass, same as FIGURED BASS. See BASS.— c. fever, a fever that runs its course without intermission.— c. fraction (Math.), a fraction whose numerator is a whole number and whose denominator is a whole number plus a fraction whose numerator is a whole number and whose denominator is a whole number plus a fraction, etc.— c. proportion (Math.), a series of three or more quantities in which the ratio is the same between each two adjacent terms; as, 2, 4, 8, 16, where 2 : 4 :: 4 : 8 :: 8 : 16.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

con"tĭ-nu'ĭ-ty, 1 kŏn'tĭ-niū'ĭ-tĭ; 2 cŏn"tĭ-nū'ĭ-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiş, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being continuous, extended, or prolonged; uninterrupted connection in space, time, operation, or development.

The life of a nation is a unity and continuity of generations.
G. B. CHEEVER God's Hand in America p. 51. [W. & P. 1841.]

2. Math. The property of having all parts or elements absolutely contiguous, so that in passing from one to another all intervening parts and no others are traversed. Space and time have absolute continuity; the series of rational numbers has not continuity, because in passing from one to another irrational values must be traversed. 3. Phren. The faculty by which thought and feeling are held to a continuous line of action, so as to finish what is begun. 4. A part, as of a bone, between the ends. [< F. continuité, < L. continuita(t-)s, < continuus; see CONTINUOUS.] — doctrine of continuity, the doctrine, particularly as advocated by Leibnitz, that all real variations are continuous, or made by small increments of change, and that nature makes no leaps or sudden and great alterations in her products and processes.— germinal c. (Biol.), the unbroken transmission from parent to offspring of some part of its physical substance by means of germ-cells, for generation after generation, the method of which is variously explained.— principle or law of c. 1. An ambiguous expression meaning either (1) the assumed principle that nature breaks none of her own laws, does nothing suddenly, or that her changes are preceded by a preparation, or (2) the law of causation.

Assuming the existence of a Supreme Governor of the universe, the principle of Continuity may be said to be the definite expression in our words of trust that He will not put us to permanent intellectual confusion.
STEWART AND TAIT Unseen Universe ch. 2, p. 88. [MACM. 1876.]

2. Math. (1) The law that in passing from one state to another all the intervening states must be traversed. (2) The assumption that certain forms are continuous with the rest among which they are to be classed and considered, and that common relations which hold for an indeterminable state hold for all specific states that may be derived therefrom by repeated variation, notwithstanding that in extreme cases the statement presents apparent absurdity. Called also geometric continuity.— protoplasmic c. (Biol.), the connection of adjacent cells by means of protoplasmic strands.— solution of c. (Surg.), separation or division of tissue or of continuous surfaces or parts, as the skin, bone, etc., by rupture, fracture, laceration, or the like. — synthesis of c. (Surg.), the direct union of the ends of a fractured bone or of the edges of a wound.

con-tĭ'nu-o, 1 kŏn-tĭ'nu-ō; 2 cŏn-tĭ'nu-ō, n. [It.] Mus. Continued or figured bass. See BASS.

con-tĭn'u-ous, 1 kŭn-tĭn'yu-us; 2 cŏn-tĭn'yu-ŭs, a. 1. Connected, extended, or prolonged without separation or interruption of sequence; unbroken; uninterrupted; unintermitted.

McCOSH Intuitions p. 178. [C. & BROS. 1869.]

2. Bot. Without joints or articulations. 3. Math. Having continuity. 4. Having but one direction, as distinguished from alternating: said of an electric current. [< L. continuus, < contineo; see CONTAIN.] SYN.: see CONTINUAL; GRADUAL; PERPETUAL.— continuous action (Mech.), action without reversal. The action of a circular saw is continuous, that of an ordinary hand-saw is alternating.— c. consonant, a consonant of continuable sound, as s, r.— c. function, a function which in passing from one value to another goes through an unbroken series of intermediate values.— c.-service certificate (U. S. Navy), a certificate granting extra pay and privileges to a continuous-service man who reenlists.— c.-service man (U. S. Navy), one who within four months from the time of discharge reenters the service.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

con-tĭn'u-um, 1 kŏn-tĭn'yu-um; 2 cŏn-tĭn'yu-ŭm, n. [-U-A, pl.] 1. A total that is continuous and uninterrupted; that which has perfect continuity; as, the continuum of space.

A universal continuum appears in space where progression is uninterrupted in all directions. Time is a one-dimensional continuum capable of geometrical representation by a line. Sense qualities, such as those of color, tone, and taste, are capable of arrangement in systems or qualitative continua. The whole of individual conscious life has been described as a continuum.
United Editors Encyc. vol. ix, article Continuum.

2. That of which the only variation predicable is temporal or spatial. 3. A basic common character underlying a series or aggregation of indefinite variations. 4. Math. The entire system of positive and negative integral, fractional, and irrational numbers. [L., neut. sing. of continuus; see CONTINUOUS.]

cont'line, 1 kont'lin or -loin; 2 cŏnt'lin or -lin, n. Naut. 1. The space between casks stowed alongside of each other so that their bilges touch. 2. The space between adjacent strands on the outside of a rope. [< CANT¹, n., + LINE, cord.]

con-tor'ni-ate, 1 kŏn-tôr'nĭ-ēt; 2 con-tôr'nĭ-āt. Rom. Antiq. I. n. A bronze medal bordered on obverse and reverse by a circular furrow, having on one side a head and on the other, sometimes, emblems of the public games: probably struck during the imperial period, to be given to successful competitors. II. a. Bordered with a circular furrow. [< It. contorniato, pp. of contorniare, make a circuit, < contorno, CONTOUR.] con-tor"ni-a'to†; con-tour'ni-ate†.

A Contorniate of the Emperor Trajan. 1/2

con-tor'sive, } 1 kŏn-tôr'sĭv; 2 cŏn-tôr'sĭv, a. Characterized con-tor'sivˢ, ʃ by or having the quality of contortion; of contorting tendency.

con-tort', 1 kŏn-tôrt'; 2 cŏn-tôrt', rt. To twist violently; especially, to twist into a misshapen form; wrench out of shape or place; as, to contort a limb. [< L. contortus, pp. of contorqueo, < con- (< cum), with, + torqueo, twist.]

Con-tor'tæ, 1 kŏn-tôr'tĭ; 2 cŏn-tôr'tē, n. pl. Bot. Same as GENTIANALES.

con-tort'ed, 1 kŏn-tôrt'ed; 2 cŏn-tôrt'ĕd, pa. 1. Twisted out of shape; distorted. 2. Bot. Rolled or wound together; twisted; in estivation; convolute.— -ly, adv.

con-tor'tion, 1 kŏn-tôr'shŏn; 2 cŏn-tôr'shon, n. 1. The act of contorting, or the state of being contorted; unnatural or spasmodic writhing or wryness; distortion. 2. Bot. An irregular twisting of the stem or branches of plants: from interruption of growth. [< L. contortio(n-), < contortus; see CONTORT.] con-tor'sion†.— con-tor'tion-ist, n. 1. An acrobat who is trained to distort his limbs and assume unnatural postures. con-tor'sion-ist†. 2. One who contorts; specif., one who twists the meanings of words.— con-tor'tious, a. [Rare.] Being in a state of contortion; distorted.— con-tor'tious-ness†, n.— con-tor'tĭv(eˢ, a. Pertaining or tending to contortion.— con-tor"tu-osˡ'ty, n. [Rare.] The state of being intricately twisted together.

con"tor-tu'pli-cate, 1 kŏn'tor-tiū'plĭ-kēt; 2 cŏn"tôr-tū'plĭ-cāt, a. 1. Ethnol. Crinkled, as the hair of negroid peoples. 2. Bot. Turned back on itself; twisted and plaited or folded. [< L. contortuplicatus, < contortus (see CONTORT) + plicatus, pp. of plico, fold.]

con-tour', 1 kŏn-tūr'; 2 cŏn-tur', rt. To make or draw in outline or contour; make contour-lines on or determine the contour-lines of.— con-tour'ing, n.

con-tour', 1 kŏn-tūr' or kŏn'tūr; 2 cŏn-tur' or cŏn'tur (XIII), n. The line bounding a figure or body; in fortification, the outline of a horizontal section of a system of works. [F., < contourner, < LL. contorno, < L. con- (< cum) intens.; and see TURN, v.]— complex contour (Math.), any contour made up of many curves.— contour'-feath"ers, n. pl. Ornith. The (outer) feathers that determine the contour of a bird; pennæ.— c.-line, n. The line, or one of the lines, constituting the boundary of a plane; in surveying, the intersection of a horizontal plane with the surface of a country at any height, as at the sea-level. On topographical maps contour-lines are drawn for equal differences of elevation, and hence indicate steepness or the reverse, according as they are crowded together or spread apart.— simple c. (Math.), a closed curve forming a contour and not intersecting with any other curve.

con-tourd', pp. Contoured. S. S.

con"tour-né', 1 kŏn'tūr-nē'; 2 cŏn-tur'ne', a. [F.] Her. Turned toward the sinister side: said of an animal as a charge. See illus. in next column.

contr., abbr. Contract; contracted; contraction; contrary.

contra-, prefix. Against; opposite; contrary; as, *contra*diction; *contra*position. In music it signifies an octave lower than some other instrument; as, *contra*bass. [< L. contra-, < contra, against, < cum; see COM-.]— con'tra-ar"tĭth-met'ĭ-cal, a. Math. Having, as a series, each term after the second equal to the sum of the two terms preceding.

A Lion passant regardant with head contourné.

con'tra-band, 1 kŏn'tra-band; 2 cŏn'tra-bănd, a. 1. Inter. Law. Falling under a public edict, treaty, or ban of prohibition or exclusion; forbidden.

Nothing can justly be regarded as contraband unless so regarded by the laws of nations or by express convention between certain parties.
WOOLSEY Inter. Law p. 324. [S. 1891.]

2. Contrary to or outside of the law; as, a contraband distillery. [< It. contrabbando, < L. contra (see CONTRA-) + LL. bandum, bannum; see BAN¹, n.] — contraband goods, goods smuggled into a country.

con'tra-band, n. 1. Goods that a neutral is prohibited by the laws of war to furnish to either belligerent, as arms, ammunition, and military or naval supplies, which are classed as absolute contraband in contradistinction to occasional c., which consists of articles not necessarily intended for use in war, as grain, horses, etc., more fully said to be contraband of war. 2. Trade forbidden by law or treaty. 3. U. S. Hist. Any fugitive slave who escaped from his master in the civil war and took refuge within the Union lines.

Gen. B. F. Butler in 1861 declared such fugitive, if a chattel by local law, to be "contraband of war" according to the laws of nations, and that therefore he should be protected from reclamation by his former master.

— con'tra-band-ism, n. The act or work of trafficking in contraband; smuggling. con'tra-band-age†; con'tra-band-e-ry†.— con'tra-band-ist, n.

con'tra-bass, 1 kŏn'tra-bēs; 2 cŏn'tra-bās. Mus. I. a. An octave lower in pitch or range than another instrument of the same class; of deep range; as, a contrabass horn. II. n. A contrabass viol. [< It. contrabasso, < contra (< L. contra; see CONTRA-) + basso (< LL. bassus,) low.] — con'tra-bass"ist, n. One who performs on the contrabass.— con'tra-bas'so, n. A contrabass.

con'tra-bour"don, 1 kŏn'tra-bûr'dən; 2 cŏn'tra-bur'don, n. Mus. An organ-stop which produces tones an octave lower than the bourdon proper. [< CONTRA- + BOURDON¹.]

con"tra-cep'tion, 1 kŏn"tra-sep'shən; 2 cŏn"tra-çĕp'shon, n. †The prevention of conception or fecundation.— con"tra-cep'tive, I. adj. Preventing conception; as, a contraceptive agent. II. n. An agent or device to prevent conception.

Con'tra Cos'ta, 1 kŏn'tra kos'ta; 2 cŏn'tra cŏs'ta. A county in W. California; 728 sq. m.; county-seat, Martinez.

con'tra-coup", 1 kŏn'tra-kūp"; 2 cŏn'tra-cup', n. 1. Counter-coupe. 2. Counter-stroke. [< CONTRA- + COUP¹, n.] con-tract', 1 kŏn-trakt'; 2 cŏn-trăct', v. I. t. 1. To draw together the parts of; shorten or render less extensive by drawing in; abridge in compass or duration; hence, to wrinkle; condense; opposed to expand; as, cold contracts metals. 2. Gram. To shorten, as a word, by omitting a vowel or compounding two, or by omission of a letter or a syllable. 3. To take to oneself; become affected with; acquire; as, to contract a debt; to contract a disease. 4. To settle or establish by contract or covenant; as, to contract an alliance or a marriage. 5. To betroth.

Your niece, is she? . . . My son, sir. They are contracted to each other. GOLDSMITH She Stoops to Conquer act ii.

II. i. 1. To be drawn closer together; be brought within narrower compass; shrink. 2. To make a contract; bargain to do or furnish something. 3. To give a promise of marriage. [< L. contractus, pp. of contraho, < con- (< cum), with, + traho, draw.] SYN.: see ABBREVIATE.— con-trac'tant, n. Law. A contracting party.— con"trac-ta'tion†, n. The act of contracting or trading.— con-tract'er, n.— con-tract"ĭ-bĭl'ĭ-ty, n.— con-tract'ĭ-bl(eᴾ or -a-bl(eᴾ, a.— con-tract'ĭ-bl(e-nessᴾ, n.

con'tract, 1 kŏn'trakt; 2 cŏn'trăct, n. 1. A formal agreement between two or more parties; also, a writing setting forth and evidencing the agreement, and signed by the parties.

Before the invention of writing contracts, testaments, sales, marriages, and the like were transacted in public.
TYTLER Elements Gen. Hist. p. 12. [H. G. B. 1850.]

2. Law. An agreement recognized by law as constituting an obligation to do or not to do a particular thing; also, the department of law dealing with such agreements.

The obligation of contract is an obligation created and determined by will of the parties. Herein is the characteristic difference of contract from all other branches of law. The business of the law, therefore, is to give effect so far as possible to the intention of the parties, and all the rules of interpreting contracts go back to this fundamental principle and are controlled by it. Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. vii, p. 38.

3. A piece of work to be done according to such agreement; the execution of or right to execute such work; as, the contract was awarded to me. 4. A betrothal. 5. Marriage. 6. Gram. A contracted form. 7†. Mutual attraction; a drawing together. [< L. contractus, < contractus, pp. contraho; see CONTRACT, v.] SYN.: agreement, arrangement, bargain, cartel, compact, covenant, engagement, promise, stipulation. All these words involve at least two parties, though an engagement or promise may be the act of but one. Mutual promises may have the force of a contract. A consideration, or compensation, is essential to convert an agreement into a contract. A contract may be oral or written. A covenant in law is a written contract under seal. Covenant is frequent in religious usage, as contract is in law and business. Compact is essentially the same as contract, but is applied to international agreements, treaties, etc. A bargain is a mutual agreement for an exchange of values, without the formality of a contract. A stipulation is a single item in an agreement or contract. A cartel is a military agreement for the exchange of prisoners or the like.

— accessory contract (Eng. Law), a contract entered into for the purpose of obtaining by surety, mortgage, etc., the fulfilment of the provisions of a prior contract.— avio c. [Mex.], a contract between the owner of a mine and an aviador who supplies money for working a mine. [< F. contredanse, < < contre (see CONTRE-) + danse, OF. dance; see DANCE, n.] con'tre-dance"†.

con"tra-de-cid'u-ate, 1 kon"trə-dı-sid'yu-ēt; 2 cŏn"tra-de-cid-yu-āt, a. Embryol. Having a placenta that, after labor, is not expelled, but absorbed within the uterus: characteristic of some forms of mammals. [< CONTRA- + DECIDUATE.]

con"tra-dict', 1 kon"trə-dikt'; 2 cŏn"tra-dĭct', v. I. t. 1. To affirm the contradictory of; deny, directly or by implication.

The Jewish writer [Josephus] nowhere actually contradicts our Scriptures, and in hundreds of instances he confirms them. RAWLINSON Historical Evidences p. 204. [JAS. M. 1885.]

2. To deny a statement of; address in contradiction.

When a woman is not contradicted she has no motive for obstinacy in her absurdities. GEORGE ELIOT Middlemarch vol. i, bk. i, ch. 6, p. 67. [H. 1873.]

3. To be inconsistent with; oppose; be contrary to; as, his facts contradict his theory. †4. To speak against; forbid; oppose.

II. i. To utter a contradiction; deny. [< L. contradictus, pp. of contradico, < contra (see CONTRA-) + dico, speak.] Syn.: see OPPOSE.— con"tra-dict'a-bl(eᶜᴿ, a.— con"tra-dict'er, con"tra-dic'tor, n.

con"tra-dic'tion, 1 kon"trə-dik'shən; 2 cŏn"tra-dĭc'shon, n. 1. The act of contradicting; a gainsaying; the assertion of the opposite of that which has been said. 2. Obvious inconsistency; direct opposition, as between two propositions; also, anything self-contradictory. [< L. contradictiō(n-), < contradictus; see CONTRADICT.] — contradiction in terms, a statement which contradicts itself; as, "facts which are not true": a mode of expression which should be avoided.— principle of c., the principle that it is impossible for the same thing to be and not be at the same time and in the same sense, that contradictory attributes can not coexist in and may not be affirmed of the same object, and that the same proposition can not be both true and false.— con"tra-dic'tion-al, a. Contradictory.— con"tra-dic'tious, a. [Rare.] 1. Given to contradiction; disputatious. 2. Full of contradictions; self-contradictory.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n. [Rare.]— con"tra-dic'tiv(eᵒˢ, a. [Rare.] Contradictory. —-ly, adv.— -ness, n.

Statements apparently contradictory may be explained and reconciled. ALBERT BARNES Evidences of Christianity first series, p. 46. [H. 1868.]

2. Logic. Denying possible compatibility, as of a statement with fact or of one term with another; diametrically opposed; mutually exclusive. Compare CONTRARY. Syn.: adverse, alien, incompatible, inconsistent, opposite, repugnant. See CONTRARY.— con"tra-dic'to-ri-ly, adv.— con"tra-dic'to-ri-ness, n.

con"tra-dic'to-ry, n. [-RIES, 1 -rız; 2 -rię, pl.] 1. A proposition by means of which another is absolutely denied. 2. Logic. Either of two propositions so related that the truth of either involves the falsity of the other and the falsity of either the truth of the other; as, the propositions "The man is guilty" and "The man is not guilty" are contradictories.

con"tra-dis-crim'i-nate, 1 kon"trə-dıs-krim'ı-nēt; 2 cŏn"tra-dis-crim'i-nāt, vt. [Rare.] To discriminate by way of contrast or opposite qualities.

con"tra-dis-tinc'tion, 1 kon"trə-dıs-tiŋk'shən; 2 cŏn"tra-dis-tĭnc'shon, n. Distinction by contrary qualities or by contrast: usually preceded by in and followed by to; as, soul in contradistinction to body.

con"tra-dis-tin'guish, 1 kon"trə-dıs-tiŋ'gwish; 2 cŏn"tra-dis-tĭŋ'gŭish, vt. To distinguish with special reference to points of contrast; discriminate by opposite qualities.

The experiment of a Confederation, as contra-distinguished from a more intimate and positive Union, was fairly tried by our fathers. GREELEY Amer. Conflict vol. i, p. 41. [o. D. c. 1864.]

con"tra-fa-got'to, 1 kon"trə-fə-got'to; 2 cŏn"tra-fa-gŏt'to, n. [It.] Mus. 1. A double bassoon, an octave lower than the bassoon. 2. An organ-stop made to imitate a contrafagotto.

con'tra-fis"sure, 1 kon'trə-fish"ur; 2 cŏn'tra-fish"ur, n. Surg. A fracture or contusion of the skull which takes place at a point opposite to or different from the place where the blow is received.

con"tra-flex'ure, 1 kon"trə-flek'shur; 2 cŏn"tra-flĕk'shur, n. A curving in opposite directions, like the concave and convex lines of an ogee; also, the point where one part of such a curve joins the other.

con"tra-flux'ion, 1 kon"trə-fluk'shən; 2 cŏn"tra-flŭk'shon, n. Artificial congestion of a part for healing purposes. [< CONTRA- + FLUXION.]

con"tra-fo'cal, 1 kon"trə-fō'kəl; 2 cŏn"tra-fō'cal, a. Math. Of equal linear eccentricities; as, confocal conics.— con"tra-fo'cal-ism or con"tra-fo-cal'i-ty, n.

con"tra-gam'ba, 1 kon"trə-gam'bə; 2 cŏn"tra-gäm'ba, n. A stop of an organ which reduces the tone one octave lower than the gamba.

con"tra-gre'di-ent, 1 kon"trə-grī'dı-ent; 2 cŏn"tra-grē'di-ent, a. Math. Designating two sets of variables such that when one is linearly transformed, the other is inversely transformed. [< CONTRA- + L. gradien(t-)s; see GRADIENT.]

con"tra-har-mon'ic, 1 kon"trə-hər-mon'ık; 2 cŏn"tra-här-mŏn'ic, a. Math. Designating a relation of the form $a(a-b) = c(b-c)$. con"tra-har-mon'i-cal†.— con"tra-har-mon'i-cal-ly, adv.

con'tra-hent†, a. Covenanting; contracting.

con"tra-in'di-cant, 1 kon"trə-in'dı-kənt; 2 cŏn"tra-ĭn'di-cant. I. a. Indicating the contrary. II. n. A symptom that suggests different treatment.

con"tra-in'di-cate, 1 kon"trə-in'dı-kēt; 2 cŏn"tra-ĭn'di-cāt, vt. [-CAT'ED; -CAT'ING.] Med. To indicate the opposite of; as, to contraindicate a certain mode or line of treatment.

con"tra-in"di-ca'tion, 1 kon"trə-in"dı-kē'shən; 2 cŏn"tra-ĭn"di-cā'shon, n. Med. Any symptom or circumstance indicating the inappropriateness of a given remedy or treatment.

con'tral-re†, v. & a. Contrary.

con"tral-lat'er-al, 1 kon"trə-lat'ər-əl; 2 cŏn"tra-lăt'er-al, a. Belonging to the opposite side.

con'tra-lode", n. Same as COUNTER-LODE.

con·tral'to, 1 kən·tral'to or -träl'to; 2 cŏn·träl'to or -träl'to, a. Of or pertaining to contralto.— contralto voice, the voice of the deepest tone in women, usually having a compass of two octaves beginning with F below middle C: called contralto as being opposed to the alt or alto, the highest male voice, in medieval music.

Contrast without contrariety is one of the great laws of harmonious Nature. DINAH M. CRAIK Brave Lady epilogue, p. 409. [D.]

2. A quality or a proposition contrary or opposed to another; an inconsistency; a contrary.

Flatter not yourself with contrarieties of pleasure. . . . No man can taste the fruits of autumn while he is delighting his scent with the flowers of spring. JOHNSON Rasselas p. 154. [w. c. 1789.]

3. Logic. Contraries in their relation to each other. [< F. contrariété, < LL. contrarietas, < L. contrarius; see CONTRARY, a.] Syn.: see DIFFERENCE.— the law of contrariety (Psychol.), the principle of association that either of two contrasted ideas tends to call forth the other. Thus, the thought of war suggests peace; of riches, poverty; of a pigmy, a giant.

con·tra'ri-ous, 1 kon·trē'rı-us; 2 cŏn·trā'ri-ŭs, a. [Archaic.] Showing opposition.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

It is said that absence conquers all things, love included; but it has a contrary effect on a garden.

C. D. WARNER Summer in a Garden p. 123. [H. M. & CO. 1887.]

2. Characterized or swayed by contrariness; inclined to opposition or contradiction; captious; perverse.

LOUISA M. ALCOTT Little Women p. 505. [R. BROS. 1880.]

3. Logic. Having opposite or mutually restrictive qualities: conflictingly opposed: distinguished from contradictory. 4. Bot. Opposite in direction to the part compared with; as, the silicle of the shepherd's-purse is compressed contrary to the dissepiment. [< F. contraire, < L. contrarius, < contra; see CONTRA-.]

Syn: antagonistic, conflicting, contradictory, contrasted, different, discordant, dissimilar, incompatible, incongruous, inconsistent, opposed, opposite, unlike. Things may be different which present no striking points of contrast. Things are contradictory which mutually exclude each other, so that both can not exist in the same object at the same time, as life and death. Things are contrary when the highest degree of both can not exist in the same object at the same time, but where a middle term is possible, partaking of the qualities of both. Thus, wisdom and folly are contrary, for the perfection of either excludes any trace of the other; yet most human acts and statements partake of both. Demonstration and absurdity are contradictory, for that which contains any absurdity can not be demonstrated, and that which is demonstrated can contain no absurdity. Things are inconsistent between which there is some inherent disagreement, as a Christian profession and a worldly life. Opposite refers to position, tendency, etc.; opposed, chiefly to feeling and intent; the two sides of a street are opposite; those who inhabit them may chance to be opposed. Things are incompatible which can not exist in harmonious relations, and whose action when associated tends to the extinction of one by the other; as, slavery and freedom are incompatible. See ALIEN, a.; DIFFERENT; INCONGRUOUS; INIMICAL; PERVERSE.— Ant: see synonyms for ACCORDANT.— Prep: to.

—con'tra-ry-mind"ed, a. Having the contrary opinion.— c. motion (Mus.), the opposition in melodic motion of parts when one pursues an ascending and the other a descending course at the same time.— c. terms (Logic), terms expressive of the opposite limits of divergence in the same class; as "cruel" and "kind," "zenith" and "nadir."

con'tra-ry, n. [-RIES, 1 -riz; 2 -riṣ, pl.] 1. One of two contrary things, as terms, qualities, or propositions, each considered in relation to the other.

A soldier may be at once prudent and bold, for these are opposites: he could not be at once prudent and rash, for these are contraries. TRENCH Words lect. vi, p. 197. [W. J. W. 1861.]

2. Something, as a circumstance, condition, or statement, contradicting or incompatible with another put forward in comparison; the opposite; as, these things have been alleged, but I will show the contrary. 3. [Rare.] A denial. 4†. An opponent.— by contraries, by way of opposition to anticipated procedure.— on the contrary, contrariwise.— to the c., to the contrary effect.

con'tra-ry, adv. 1. In a contrary manner or direction; as, to run contrary. 2. Her. Oppositely.

con'tra-se-lec"tion, 1 kon'trə-si-lek'shən; 2 cŏn'tra-se-lēc'shon, n. Biol. The choice of parents with the smallest hereditary percentage: opposed to normal selection.

con-trast', 1 kon-trust'; 2 cŏn-trást', v. I. t. To place in opposition, or represent in comparison, in order to show unlikeness; present extreme points of difference between; exhibit as marked by dissimilitude.

It was his great delight to contrast the pleasures of home with the hardships of school.
